Acknowledgement

'Self-consciousness exists in and for itself when, and by the fact that, it so exists for another; that is, it only exists in being acknowledged' (Hegel, 1977)

The present study deals with the phenomenon of recognition; it can hence be vindicated only when the people associated with it are truly acknowledged.

At the outset a note of thanks is extended to the Tata Institute and to our director Professor Parsuraman for providing us the basic amenities and the infrastructure for the smooth progression of our research endeavor. I am also greatly thankful to Professor D.K. Srivastava for being my guide and mentor; positive feedback and constructive criticism from him has got the best out of me.

The study was made successful with the participation of seven organizations and their employees, I am highly grateful to the HR directors of the organizations who approved of the research and made my study possible. It is certainly not easy to respond to a five page questionnaire with work targets piling at one's end. I sincerely thank the respondents who voluntarily participated and also to those who needed some convincing.

I thank Manjiri for helping me with the conceptualization of the study and structuring of the questionnaire in an orderly form. She is also responsible for introducing me to significant others who made an impact. Chandrani needs a special mention for being a constant source of inspiration and being the sole guide for methodology. Had it not been for her, I would have been lost in the limitless possibilities of quantitative analysis.

Special thanks to the gang of research scholars at TISS: Chandrani, Ashima, Rama, Mamatha, Kamlesh, Susan, Mili, Joyeetha, Premlata, Hema, Sayantani, who made the five years of research a delightful and colorful journey. Manju
Madam and the Meetings department are thanked in particular for their time and energy in providing us a trouble-free association with TISS.

There are some people who make an impression just by being. Jayaram Sir will always be remembered, not for the lectures in methodology but for the more important lessons in humility. Anirudh is thanked for always smiling and challenging my myopic vision. He helped in the realization that my conviction in the concept was a consequence of my victimization to it; thanks for showing the mirror to the monkey within, will surely throw stones to get rid of it soon!!

'Uncanny' is perhaps the word to describe my association with Ashi. Whether it is subject related, practical or emotional, her influence is far reaching. Perhaps one just can't thank enough one's alter ego.

Researches may or may not have correlated success at work with harmony and happiness at home; the veracity of the statement is however its own evidence. I sincerely thank Aayi-Nana for being the most understanding and caring parents-in-law, for providing me with the much needed support to balance work and home and for making my home a happier and a peaceful abode. Special thanks to Kamal Tai for helping me with my bundle of joy.

I am grateful to my parents for instilling in me the values that make me the person that I am. My mother needs a special mention for patiently listening to my whining every single day and helping me let go of the mental baggage. Thanks Ma for your blind faith and unconditional support; no statistics is necessary nor sufficient to measure your influence in my life.

Babies are known to be a source of great happiness and contentment; that they enhance one's efficiency is perhaps a lesser known fact. I thank my seven and a half month old baby girl for helping me multi-task at incredible levels and making me work effectively with lesser hours of sleep. Thanks Tishu for being my source of happiness and ultimate test of strength.
Sandeep will be thanked in brief as his contribution transcends any expression; words just cannot capture his influence. To say that he helped me in data collection and conceptualization of the study will be to simply disgrace his role. I am indebted to Sandeep for being the combustion behind all my efforts, for his great expectations and for his conviction that I CAN.

In the words of Majid Yar, I am dependent upon the recognition of myself by another conscious being in order to constitute myself as a self-conscious being.

Thank you All,

Pragya
