ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

As I come to the end of this research project, I am conscious of my many obligations to institutions and persons. While it is impossible to acknowledge all of them - or any of them adequately - I must record here my sense of indebtedness at least to some.

I have been very fortunate in the ready generosity of my Supervisor, Dr. (Mrs) Urmila Varma, who has taken a keen interest in my work. It was her kind persistence which has inspired and enabled me to complete this work. It is a pleasure for me to acknowledge gratefully here her able guidance at every stage of this work. I would also like to thank Professor S. Mallikarjuman for the help and encouragement he has given me all through the course of this project.

The Department of English in this University gave me, among other benefits, the opportunity to teach there for a session, which was a help to me in many ways. The friendly interest taken by all the colleagues in my work has been a source of great encouragement. In this context, I must thank here especially the Heads of the Department, Professor J.S. Misra and Dr. S.V. Chamu for the grant of facilities to pursue my studies.

Obligations are many, inevitably in such an enterprise, to scholars in the field; and every care has been taken to acknowledge in the Bibliography and the footnotes the information and ideas gathered from their books and journal articles. Any omission therefore is inadvertent, and is sincerely regretted.

The British Council Libraries at Bhopal, Bombay and Delhi have been of great help to me, and I have received much assistance from the Jawaharlal Nehru Library of this University and should like to thank the Librarians and the staff of these libraries for their many courtesies.

At a more personal level, I must record here my gratitude to my husband and children for enabling me to devote time to this project, at quite some sacrifice of their comfort.

Finally, I must also thank here Shri G.P. Rai who has worked hard to type out this dissertation in a very short time.

(Suman Banerji)