ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

During the several years of my teaching experience in a college, I observed rapid, and sometimes significant, changes in the attitudes and behaviour of college girls. But, one question continued to bother me, namely, whether and to what extent the values, attitudes and behaviour of the educated women in our country have still remained traditional. Therefore, this turned out to be the most interesting area of my research for Ph.D. This thesis is, intended no doubt, to fulfil the requirements for a Ph.D. degree; but it also gives me great personal satisfaction of having endeavoured to scientifically examine at least some aspects of the changing patterns of values, attitudes and behaviour of the educated women.

During the course of my study, from its design to completion, many friends and individuals have helped me a lot. I take this opportunity to thank heartfully all the respondents for their co-operation. I am also grateful to the principals of the colleges for giving me their permission and facilities to collect the data. I am most grateful to my respected guide, Dr. Vimal P. Shah, for his able guidance, patience, and efforts to enable me to translate my dream into a reality. I am also thankful to the faculty members of the Department of Sociology, especially Dr. Taraben Patel, Dr. B. J. Masihi and Shri Dhirubhai Desai for extending their assistance and guidance to me from time to time. I extend my most sincere thanks to Prof. Jayantbhai Kothari, Dr. Arvindbhai Bhatt and Miss Farida Abuwalla for helping me at different phases of my research. I also acknowledge with thanks the assistance of the staff of the Rollwala Computer Centre, Gujarat University, in the computerization and analysis of my data. I also thank Shree Jayantbhai Brahmbhatt for typing this thesis in a decent and accurate manner.

I sincerely appreciate my mother's continuous inspiration and co-operation throughout this study. Her anxiety, encouragement, sympathetic attitude and words full of enthusiasm have instilled in me the spirit that has naturally boosted my strength and willingness to work. On this memorable occasion, I remember from the hearts of my heart, my late and loving father, and pay homage to him with the wreath of this thesis. Without his spiritual and heavenly blessings, my dream could not have been a reality.
