ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

First and foremost, I express my deepest sense of gratitude to Dr. Sukalpa Bhattacharjee, Associate Professor of English Department, North-Eastern Hill University, Shillong, for her invaluable supervision and guidance throughout the course of my work; her keen sense of interest in my work, her vast knowledge on the subject and her constructive suggestions combined with her patient understanding made the completion of my thesis work possible.

I thank Late Prof E N Lall for inspiring me to critically study Chinua Achebe’s novels through his lectures in the class. I thank him for lending me those valuable books.

I want to thank the present and past heads of department for their encouragement and help in times of my need. Firstly, I thank Dr R P Sharma for his friendly character that makes him approachable to all. My sincere gratitude also goes to Dr Esther Syiem during whose headship most part of my thesis-writing was done. Again, the understanding guidance of Dr Moon Moon Mazumdar continues the cordial tradition in the department for which the students are proud to be part of.

Many thanks go to my colleagues in NEHU campus for their hospitality and bigness of heart to accommodate me with my bundle of necessities.

My gratefulness to my aged parents for being alive whose vision of goodness shaped my life and gave me the inspiration to dream and achieve. I will always be proud of them.

Lastly, I thank God for giving me a prudent wife in Dr Nenem (Lhangum) Simte without whose persistent nudges the work would not see the light of day.
