In the name of Allah, Most Gracious, Most Merciful.

I deem it a privilege to begin this acknowledgment by expressing my profound sense of gratitude to my revered teacher and supervisor Prof. Kaleem Mohammed Khan for his sagacious guidance and intellectual stimulation throughout the present study. His scholarly suggestions, research acumen, immense interest and affectionate behaviour have been a fountain of inspiration to me. I am indebted to him for his careful and critical review without which this thesis would have been far less illuminating and readable. Further, his profound understanding of statistics and research methodology served to be of immense help to me.

Prof. Azhar Kazmi's name deserves special mention for exhorting me to participate and send my Ph.D. proposal to P.D. Agarwal-TCI Awards Committee for Doctoral Research in Management. The subsequent selection of the proposal by the awards committee, based on an all India competitive selection process, helped me live up to his expectations.

I am thankful to Dr. Israr-ul-Haq for the encouragement and moral support extended during the final stages of the study, which rekindled the desire in me to expedite the submission of this thesis.

I express my gratitude to Dr. Parvaiz Talib who encouraged and helped me at various stages during the course of the present study. I am particularly thankful for his suggestions and highly constructive comments.
The name of Dr. Naseem Alam, Reader, Department of Statistics, AMU, deserves a special mention. Despite his busy schedule and academic compulsions he spared his invaluable time and energy in helping me understand relevant statistical tools and in computer based analysis of the data. I will always remain grateful to him.

On the other side of the world I will like to thank Prof. Patriya S. Tansuhaj, International Business Institute, Washington State University, USA; Prof. Maryon F. King, Department of Marketing, Southern Illinois University, Carbondale, USA; Prof. Akshay Rao, Carlson School of Management, University of Minnesota, USA; Prof. Marilyn Lavin, Department of Marketing, University of Wisconsin, Whitewater, USA, and Dr. Christina Kwai-Choi Lee, University of Auckland, New Zealand, who despite their busy schedules were always willing to help and supply the required research material on the subject which was not available in India.

Mr. Ashok Jambekar, Librarian and Head, NICMAN, Vikram Sarabhai Library, IIM, Ahmedabad, deserves praise for his prompt replies and help that he extended in arranging literature for the present study. I also thank members of library staff of Ratan Tata Library, Delhi University, New Delhi, for their help and cooperation.

I will like to thank the principals and teachers of all the schools who extended their cooperation in the collection of data. Their recommendations and thorough knowledge of their pupil’s background proved to be of invaluable asset to me in getting the questionnaires filled up from their parents.

I will also like acknowledging those parents and children who spared their precious time in patiently listening to me, going through the lengthy questionnaire, and candidly responding to the queries.
I would also like to mention the name of Mr. Asad Zaheer, my childhood friend, for his support, words of encouragement and help extended by him in feeding of data for the present study.

I am highly thankful to Mr. Mohd Aqeel Siddiqui, my uncle, for his continuous encouragement and best wishes.

I would also like to make a mention of Mrs. Najma Alvi, my aunt, for her incessant prayers for my academic excellence.

I owe my gratitude to Mr. Mohd Abid and Mr. Abdul Ghaffar who helped me in various capacities in the preparation of this thesis.

I thank Mr. M. Riaz Khan for sparing time and typing this thesis and that too often at odd hours.

I feel that words will hardly register the message of my indebtedness to my family members who encouraged me all through the trials and tribulations of this study. They were more concerned than I was for the early completion of this thesis.
