14. References

Ash II), 2-4 Feb., 2000, New Delhi, India. Vol. II. (Ed. Vamra, C.V. J., Rao, S.V. R., Kumar, V. and Krishnamurthy, R.), CBIP, FAM, TIFAC, DST, N.Delhi, India, Session-X: 24-30.

Ducrot V, Pery ARR, Queu H, Mons R, Lafont M, Garric J. Rearing and estimation of lifecycle parameters of the tubificid worm Branchiura sowerbyi: application to ecotoxicity testing. Sci Total Environ 2007;384:252-63.

685-696.

region in Orissa. In: Proceedings of International Conference on Mother Earth: Save it for future generations, The University of Burdwan, West Bengal, Feb. 13-15, 2010, Gr. II (Mining: Impacts, Reclamation and Ecological Restoration), Abs. 2.9: 43.

Department of Water Affairs and Forestry: pp 46, 75, 183.

Water Affairs and Forestry, pp.159.

Eby, J. (1986). Sublethal concentrations of cadmium and lead affect acquisition of discriminate avoidance learning in green frog (Rana clamitans) tadpoles. M.S. Thesis, Miami University, Oxford, OH.

Ehle, A.L. and McKee, D. C. (1990). Neuropsychological effect of lead in occupationally exposed workers:

Eisler, R. (1971). Cadmium poisoning in Fundulus heteroclitus (Pisces: Cyprinodontidae) and other marine Patuxent Wildlife Research Center, United States Geological Survey, Laurel, Maryland. p. 95.

Gadkari, A.S., Marathe, V.B. (1983). Toxicity of cadmium and lead to a fish and a snail from two different habitats. Indian Association Water Pollution Control Technology. 5:141–148.

Harry, H.W., Aldrich, D.V. (1963.) The distress syndrome in Taphius glabratris (Say) as a reaction to toxic concentration of inorganic ions. Malacologia, 1: 283–289.

Singbal, S. Y. S., George, M. D., Topgi, R.S. and Naronha, R. (1982). The levels of certain heavy metals in marine organisms from Aguda Bay (Goa), Mahasagar Bull. NIO, 15: 121-122.

Suresh, P.G. (1990). Studies on haemolymph constituents of Indoplanorbis exustus (Deshayes) and Lymnaea acuminata (Lamarck) I. rufescens (gray) and the effects of copper on the activity pattern of selected transaminases and phosphatases. Ph. D. Thesis submitted to the Cochin University of Science and Technology.

