PREFACE

This work, which studies the behaviour of government expenditure in India on the basis of empirical data and historical facts has been carried out under the guidance of Professor I.S. Gulati. It was Professor Gulati who suggested this topic about five years ago and kindly accepted to be my thesis supervisor. It was his encouragement, help and affection that enabled me to continue and finish this laborious task. I must say, but for his expertise in the field of public finance, and critical comments at every stage of my writing, this thesis would not have taken the present form. Indeed I am fortunate in having him as my guide and owe greatest debt to him.

I must express my gratitude to Dr. J.C. Sandesara, Department of Economics, M.S. University of Baroda who encouraged and acquainted me with some of the statistical techniques involved in the study. Infact he was my temporary guide when Professor Gulati was away from India for some time. I am grateful to Dr. V.N. Kothari for inspiring me and sparing his time liberally to discuss with him. I owe great debt to Dr. K.N. Naik, Dean, Faculty of Commerce for encouraging me and showing keen interest in the progress of my work.
As the data required for this work was not available at Baroda, I had to visit a few research Institutions and libraries at Delhi and Bombay. In the process of collecting data, I had collected a number of obligations as well. I take this opportunity to express my gratitude to them.

My first debt is to the Reserve Bank of India, Bombay, where quite a large number of people have helped me not only by providing material, but also by sparing their valuable time to discuss with me on conceptual and statistical part of this study. I owe my debt to Dr. N.S.R. Sastri, who until recently was the Statistical Advisor, Reserve Bank of India, (now retired) for permitting me to discuss with him and the staff of his department "at anytime during the office hours". I am grateful to Shri V.V. Divetia, the then Director of Statistics for his discussion on deflation of government expenditure and lending his personal books; to Shri G.S. Murthi, the then Deputy Director of Statistics, now Director, for Explaining the procedure adopted in classifying public expenditure by the Reserve Bank of India; To Dr. Machiraju, Deputy Director, Fiscal Analysis, for lending his personal books and rendering all possible help; and to Shri Rajagopalan, Deputy Director, Fiscal Analysis, for allowing me to refer some of the Government of India's publications in his cabin.
I must mention Shri P.K. Raghunathan, Librarian, Reserve Bank of India who has helped me very much in collecting data by providing the old documents whenever I approached by taking all kinds of troubles. But for his cooperation and sympathy extended to me I could not have collected in the manner I have done at present. I am grateful to him.

My thanks are due to Dr. I.G. Patel, who until recently was the Chief Economic Advisor, Government of India, and now Special Finance Secretary, Government of India, and to Shri A. Premchand, Ministry of Finance, Government of India for sparing their valuable time to discuss with me and providing some literature on the classification of Government expenditure.

I am thankful to University of Baroda and University Grants Commission for awarding the Travel Grants. I am thankful to Director, Centre for Advanced Studies in Industrial Economics and Public Finance, Department of Economics, University of Bombay for awarding 'Fellowship' to complete the collection and processing of data.

My thanks are due to Professors, Alan T. Peacock and Jack Wiseman, who promptly furnished information on the papers I wanted.
I am thankful to Librarian, Smt. Hansa Mehta Library, M.S. University, Baroda for getting books under inter-library loan, to M.C. Chakravarthy, Librarian, Ministry of Finance, Government of India, New Delhi; Shri Marshall, Librarian, University of Bombay and Librarians of Indian Merchants' Chamber Library and Asiatic Society Library, Bombay for permitting me to refer to official documents.

My thanks are due to Mr. C.N. Kachhia, typist, in the Smt. Hansa Mehta Library for typing the thesis neatly. Last, but by no means least, I wish to thank my wife for her encouragement.
