Acknowledgements

I express the first and foremost word of my heart-felt gratitude to Dr Varghese John, who has not only been my guide, but friend and philosopher for a long time. I had the privilege of working under his supervision and getting his instructions on every minute detail of grammar, structure, spelling, punctuation, and documentation in connection with the dissertation. His meticulous scrutiny and unstinting encouragement made my approach to the study serious and boosted my confidence in the work.

There are other people and institutions in India and abroad that have helped me in several ways to complete it. Of them, I would like to mention a few names. My thanks are due to the librarians and the staff of the IACIS (formerly ASRC), Hyderabad; CIEFI, Hyderabad; American Center Library, New Delhi; British Council Libraries in New Delhi, Chennai, and Thiruvananthapuram; USIS, Chennai; and U.C College Library, Aluva.

May I use this opportunity also to thank the Manager and the Principal of S. N. M. College, Maliankara for their magnanimous consent for pursuing the study. I am also indebted to the Principals of U. C. College, Dr Rajan Varughese (Former Principal) and Dr Raju K. John (Present Principal) for their patronising attitude to learning at their Research Centre.

For getting certain books and articles that were not available in Indian libraries, I sought the help of my friends in the U. K and the U. S. A. Dr P. G. Madhavan, Product Specialist, EN-Tek, Cincinnati, U. S. A., and his wife Ann Bett Madhavan were kind enough to send me a couple of books on Sam Shepard. I remember Prof. William Shephard of Washington State University, U. S. A, with whom I struck friendship at the ASRC, Hyderabad. A theatre-person who has directed some of the plays of Shepard and acted in many of them, he shared with me his insights into the plays in our discussions on the mainstream dramatists and directors in America and Europe, especially the contributions of theorists and directors like Antonin Artaud, Jerzy Grotowski, and Richard Schechner.

Jennifer Mackerras, a research scholar at Bristol University, U. K., not only answered my queries and points of clarifications regarding English drama in general and Harold Pinter in particular through her e-mails but also sent me the Irving Wardle article: "Comedy of Menace," by post, at a time when the frantic search for it in Indian libraries was leading me to an emotional crisis. She deserves special mention here. My friend, Mr S. Madhavan, a computer engineer in Slough, England, showed the courtesy of helping me fulfil my search for Walter Kerr's Columbia Essays on Pinter and Katherine Burkman's The Dramatic World of Harold Pinter: Its Basis in Ritual, by sending them by post.

This acknowledgement would not be complete without a word of my gratitude to Dr V. Rajakrishnan, Institute of English, Thiruvananthapuram, and my friends Dr P. Madhavan and Dr Rajiv Krishnan of CIEFL, Hyderabad, who have given me valuable suggestions in the study. I remember with pleasure and gratitude Prof. Isaac Sequeira's encouragement and advice. Mr Sudarsan Reddy, Ms Ann Kumaraswamy, Mr Nag Bhushan, Mr V. Srinath, Mr Abdul Khayoom, Mr Anjanelu, Mr Moorthy and the late Mr Chari of the ASRC have extended their whole-hearted service and advice to me while I was at the ASRC. Along with them, I remember Mr A. V. Vijayan of St. Albert's College, Ernakulam, a friend of mine and my roommate at the ASRC, and the worthwhile hours I spent with him during my stay there.

And last but not least, I remember my wife Sulekha, my daughter Shanthi, my niece Reshmi and my nephew Rohit who have helped me get this typed out.
