Acknowledgements

Many have contributed immensely to this work of mine, and I am greatly thankful to all of them. I cannot but mention here at least a few of these names.

The eternal God, I sincerely believe, made conditions favourable on my behalf, and so to the Almight y my gratitude is due first. I consider myself fortunate to work under my teacher and guide, Professor Mrinal Miri, the Vice-chancellor, North-Eastern Hill University, Shillong. Prof. Miri is a well known philosopher in India. He took great care in minutely going through my draft and took keen interest in my area of research, making me understand and follow the entire Marxian and neo-Marxian scheme of thought. I express my deep sense of gratitude to him. Professor Sujata Miri, Dean, School of Humanities and Education, NEHU is a person without whom this work would not have become a possibility, as she remained a source of motivation throughout the entire period of my project.

I am also greatly indebted to the efforts given by Mr. & Mrs. Siby K. George for painstakingly going through my manuscript and typesetting the thesis in its complete form on the computer. I express my sincere gratitude to this special family. My colleague and friend, Mr. Louis Pyngrope, who in spite of his busy schedule, took time out to help me to take print-outs of the thesis on his PC, and to him also I am indebted.

I also express my gratitude to Prof. C. R. Agera, Head, Department of Philosophy, NEHU and Prof. Jagat Pal, my teacher during post graduation, for their concern and help rendered during the course of my research. Also, indispensable were the help of Dr. Anju Joshi, Head, Department of Philosophy, Lady Keane College, Shillong, Mrs. Emilia and Dr. Sabita Das and Mrs. Savitri, my colleagues.

Angela, my wife, has been the mainstay of inspiration during the long period of my research, and I dare say, this thesis would not have seen the light of day, if not for her understanding and support.

Finally, I dedicate, this my little effort, to Athira Mol, my daughter, the greatest gift I have ever received.
