I am indebted to Dr. Varghese John, my friend and supervisor who, with infinite patience and understanding, guided me through the intricacies of research. His reassurances have gone a long way in instilling confidence, and his thoughtful suggestions have helped in improving the quality of this thesis.

I am grateful to Dr. Robert Brophy, Senior Editor, Jeffers Studies, and an eminent Jeffers scholar, who responded promptly to my cry for help; to the staff of Robinson Jeffers Foundation, Carmel, California, who were thrilled to meet a researcher from India and arranged a tour of Hawk Tower and Tor House; to the Indo American Centre for International Studies, Hyderabad, where I discovered Robinson Jeffers and ecocriticism, and which provided me with almost all the material I needed for my research; to my colleagues in the Department of English, St. Paul’s College, Kalamassery, who lent me support when I needed it; and to the Principal, the Head of the English Department and the Staff of my research centre, Union Christian College, Alwaye, for their help and cooperation.

A special word of thanks to my brother James in California who was interested enough to arrange a visit to Carmel and the Big Sur Coast and to send me all the relevant material on Jeffers that he could find; my friend Aisha Ravindran whose companionship sustained me during the lonely moments of research; my parents whose encouragement and support kept me going; and above all, Tony and Rohan, whose concern and support meant so much to me, for much of the time that has gone into this work should have been theirs.
