The author owes a deep sense of gratitude to Dr. E.M. Das, Professor of Anthropology, University of Guwahati, for suggesting the problem and valuable guidance throughout the course of this work. His critical appreciation at the time of completion of this work is also gratefully acknowledged. Thanks are also due to Drs. B. Das and R. Das of the Department of Anthropology, University of Saurati for their occasional help and encouragement from time to time.

Utmost cooperation was extended by all the teachers and the laboratory staff of the Department of Anthropology, for which the author is grateful to them.

The author is thankful to the University of Saurati for providing laboratory and library facilities for pursuit of this work, and to the University Grants Commission for financial assistance.

The field study was ably assisted by Shri Saphilia Angami, Lab. Attendant, Science College, Kohima, who also acted as my interpreter. But for the cooperation and permission of the 'Gon Bures' of Lotsame village, this study would not have been possible and the author is indebted to them.
