ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

In preparing this thesis many persons offered their valuable advice and suggestions for which I am indebted to them. Through this humble approach I want to pay my hearty thanks to all of them.

I am happy to express my gratitude to Professor P.C. Goswami, Department of Commerce, Gauhati University under whose guidance the thesis has been prepared. I am deeply indebted to him for his affectionate encouragement, advice and sympathetic criticisms.

I am ever grateful to my respected teacher Professor R. Mehrotra, Head, Department of Economics, Dibrugarh University, who took great pain in bringing the thesis into shape in the initial stage.

I am also grateful to Dr. Atul Goswami, Reader, Department of Economics, Dibrugarh University for his constant encouragement and valuable suggestions. His expert advice and searching criticisms have helped to a great extent in bringing the thesis into its final shape. I am also indebted to my teachers, Shri Bhuban Boruah, Shri Khirod Saikia, late Bhuban Chutia, lecturers and Dr. Homeswar Goswami, Reader, Department of Economics, Dibrugarh University for their time to time encouragement.

My sincere thanks are due to Shri Dipankar Dutta, Research Assistant, Revenue (R) Department, Assam Sashibalaya, who bothered to spare his valuable time in showing me the files dealing with land reforms. I offer my thanks to Shri J.
N. Sarma, former Director of Economics and Statistics, Government of Assam for permitting me to consult the official documents.

I am also grateful to my friends, particularly to Shri Jayanta Kumar Gogoi, Lecturer, Department of Economics, Dibrugarh University and Shri Prabhakar Chaudhury for their constant encouragement.

I offer my heartfelt gratitude to Professor Khursid Alam, Department of Economics, Gauhati University and to Professor D.P. Boruah, Head, Department of Political Science, Gauhati University for their kind help in registering myself in the Gauhati University for Ph.D. degree.

I shall be failing in my duty if I do not acknowledge the cooperation and help I received from the staff of the Dibrugarh University Library, particularly from Mrs. Santi Das, Assistant Librarian, staff of the Assam Agricultural University Library, Gauhati University Library and of the National Library, Calcutta.

I thank Shri Pulin Sarma and Shri Dilip Sarma for doing the rough typing of the thesis and to Shri Khagen Gogoi who with his masterly command typed the thesis finally. My gratitude also goes to my father who at such an old age was always with me particularly during the period of collection of data from different official sources.
Lastly, I offer my hearty thanks to Shri Atikuddin Ahmed, Lecturer, Department of Economics, D.H.S.K. College, Dibrugarh for comparing the typed scripts and to my brothers and sisters for their encouragement.
