Preface

I am indebted to a number of persons in connection with my research work in Assam as well as for the preparation of the chapters of my thesis.

It is not merely out of a sense of duty but with deep gratitude that I acknowledge the help and guidance of my supervisor, Professor Praphulladatta Goswami. His encouragement for the pursual of my work is perhaps the major reason which saw me through the completion of the final draft of the thesis. I would like to thank Shri Roseswar Saikia of Krishnanagar, Guwahati for his invaluable comments which gave me new insights into my research. Besides this, he helped me understand a lot of the subtle meanings of Lokagits as well as the primary characteristics and background of several Borgeets.

I would like to convey my sincere thanks and gratitude to Shri and Smt. Premananda Thakur who welcomed me at their place while I was in Majuli in 1980. Besides being wonderful hosts, they were eager to provide all the information that I sought from them regarding my work. Many thanks to my dear friend, Smt. Usha Rao for editing the chapters and retouching the language of the thesis.

I am grateful to the staff of the Nehru Memorial
Museum and Library, Jawaharlal Nehru University Library, Archives and Research Centre for Ethnomusicology of the AIIS, New Delhi; District Libraries of Guwahati and Tezpur and the Gauhati University Library for their assistance and cooperation. Many thanks to Shri Gabar Singh Fanwar for typing out the thesis in an incredibly short time.

I would like to extend my deep appreciation to my husband, Rana Behal for his encouragement and for bearing the burden of house-care while I was out at field work. He also provided me with library material and notes which enabled me to do much of my writing at home. My two young children were responsible for slowing down my research work despite Renu's constant help. Nonetheless, they were welcome distractions as they made me appreciate another equally important facet of human life.

Finally, it is to my parents that this thesis is dedicated. It was their love, affection and consistent understanding that saw me through my formative years, and encouraged me always to do what I thought best.
