ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The ideas of this dissertation began with my interest in poetry and this project as such is the result of many years of intellectual development. First of all, I express my profound gratitude to the Almighty God who blessed and guided me throughout my literary journey. I am extremely grateful to my Research Supervisors Dr. Augustine Joseph and Dr. Mathew Joseph, scholars with boundless knowledge which they generously shared. They helped me to formulate my ideas when they were still quite inchoate and uncertain. They were insightful enough to fine-tune the arguments, and for so much else. In particular, I thank Dr. Augustine for his availability at a time when everything appeared difficult to proceed.

Dr. Mathew Joseph opened up my world to literary research. His ability to articulate and clarify what was lost in between, even during the formal chats over the phone, was remarkable. He provided crucial details and perceptions about specific issues and about the dissertation as a whole. I have benefited a great deal by his ability to see what I often failed to recognize. I am quite grateful and appreciative of the time, energy and resources that he spent on my behalf.

Dr. Gray, Professor at Seton Hall and New York State University, who taught me courses in American Poetry as a part of the Master’s programme, read a few chapters of this dissertation, providing insight on organization and clarity. He helped sharpen close readings of poems with his critical acumen and literary expertise. Dr. Angela Weisl, the Graduate Advisor and Dr. Martha Carpentier, the Chair of the Research Department of English, Seton Hall University, were so unsparing in devoting their time and resources for discussions and clarifications. Ms. Gemma Sullivan, the Director of English Education in Higher Secondary Schools, New Jersey, was so generous with her comments and reflections. Dr. John Wargacki, Associate Professor and Director of ‘Poetry in-the-Round’, Seton Hall University, helped me to realize the dream of meeting Adrienne Rich and conduct an interview with her. I do gratefully remember them for their meticulous support and sincere encouragement. I am also very much indebted to Rev. John Kennedy, Pastor, Immaculate Heart of Mary Church, Scotch Plains and to Rev. John Judge, Pastor, Saint Cassian Church, Montclair for their insights and guidance.

I thank Ms. Adrienne Rich, who is the subject of my study, for allowing me to interview her at Seton Hall University. The few hours I spent with her have had a profound effect on my research. It was kind of her to have found time to discuss her poetry with me. I have given a short account of my interview as an appendix at the end of this dissertation.
This project would not have been possible without the assistance of many people. I am grateful to the Principal and the Chair of the Department of English, St. Thomas College Pala. I also extend my gratitude to the Librarians at the IUCIS, Hyderabad, Seton Hall University, New Jersey, State University of New York, Fordham University, New York, State Research Library, New York, Benedictine University, Chicago, Montclair Public Library and Bloomfield Public Library, New Jersey, for unstintingly ordering dozens of Inter-Library Loan books and journal articles.

I am very much indebted to my Provincial Superior Fr. Jerome Cherusserry CMI who encouraged me to the extent of providing me with the ways and means to meet Adrienne Rich and do research by having a direct exposure to the process of teaching and learning of literature in American classrooms.

Finally, my deepest appreciation goes to Dr. Harshajan Pazhayattil, the Manager, my colleagues in Department of English and my friends in Prajyoti Niketan College, my Superiors, and my friends in the CMI Congregation.

I do appreciate the love and support from my parents and family. They helped me through it all, over these years working to get this done. Their support has been invaluable and their love has made it all make sense.
