ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This dissertation is the result of the encouragement, guidance and support of a great number of persons who are inseparably linked to my life. A verbal display of gratitude to them is next to impossible. However, I feel bound to mention at least a few of them.

Dr. Augustine Joseph, Dept. of English, St. Thomas College, Pala, has been a true guide to me in this research. His vast knowledge, deep literary insight, rich experience in research guidance spanning into decades and, above all, his warm and genial rapport with the wards have enormously enriched my project. To my wandering bark making its voyage through knowledge he has always remained the guiding beacon. He has touched up my work with deft strokes of academic professionalism and made it what it is.

I am infinitely indebted to my erudite and inspiring teachers of Central University of Hyderabad and Deva Matha College, Kuravilangad for implanting in me a love of literary studies and an aspiration to pursue it further.

I express my sincere gratitude to Prof. Joy C. George, Principal, St. Peter’s College, Kolenchery and to my colleagues in the Department of English for their generous encouragement in this venture.

My first principal, Dr. M.P Mathai, a renowned English scholar and a member of the Faculty of Gandhian Studies, Mahatma Gandhi University, Kottayam, has inspired me greatly with his untiring quest for knowledge.

I gratefully place on record the services rendered by Dr. Salil Varma, Department of English, St. Joseph’s College, Devagiri in procuring some very valuable material for this study.

I have been very much motivated by the intellectual curiosity of my post-graduate students, especially Miss. Vidya S. Chandran.

The greatest debt of all is to my learned brother, Dr. Siby James, Department of English, St. Thomas College, Pala, but for whose evergreen motivation and chiselling, this project would have just remained a dream. It was during my discussions with him that the idea of this research germinated in my mind.

I am especially grateful to my husband, Mr. Jees George, lecturer, College of Applied Science (IHRD), Thodupuzha, who has been there with me at each and every moment of the trials and tribulations of formulating this dissertation.

With heartfelt gratitude I would like to thank my father, Prof. K.M Chacko, former Head of the Department of English, Deva Matha College, Kuravilangad. He is the source of inspiration behind his children’s love for literature and academics, and has always provided me with a treasure house of valuable tips.

But for the boundless support and encouragement of the two families, my husband’s and mine, this project would not have become a reality. The smiles and tears on the face of my four year old son, Nirmal, have spiced my work and made it a memorable experience.

Sonia James