A doctoral thesis takes shape with the countless direct and indirect contributions over an extended period of time. I shall do my best to acknowledge them here. To begin with, I would like to express my heartfelt gratitude to my guide, Dr. Rajendrasinh Jadeja, who has been a constant source of inspiration and motivation to me. His invaluable suggestions and comments, and overall guidance and encouragement, have played a major role in shaping this thesis. I shall remain indebted for having the opportunity and privilege of knowing and working with a mentor like Dr. Jadeja.

Most importantly, I would like to thank the origin of my inspiration and the driving force of my life, my parents, Janet and Dr. Pankaj Hiradhar, who gave me the strength to embark on this journey and stood by me as strong pillars of support throughout. Thanks to my sister, Rima, for supporting and encouraging me in every endeavour of my life.

Within the H.M. Patel institute of English Training and Research, I am indebted to all the faculty members and administrative and support staff for their contributions. I would like to thank Dr. Piyush Joshi for his constant encouragement, Dr. Atanu Bhattacharya for his vital insights into the field, Sunil Shah, for being the Good Samaritan and an invaluable friend, and Kiran Chauhan for his patient and opportune assistance during my study. This thesis would not have been complete without each of their contributions.

I would also like to thank Dr. Mahendra Chotaliya and Dr. Sulbha Natraj, for providing comments and validating my program and tests as experts. Thanks are also due to Dharmesh Raikundaliya, who gave valuable advice regarding statistical methods and helped me conduct statistical analysis of my study.

Thanks to my colleagues and students, at the Lingnan University in Hong Kong, for providing useful insights during process, and without whom, the research would not have been possible.

Finally, in the words of Dale Carnegie, “Success is getting what you want. Happiness is wanting what you get.” Both success and happiness would not have been attainable without the contributions from each and every one who have been with me throughout this journey.

Preet Hiradhar