ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The present work is the result of guidance and assistance emanating from many quarters. The list of persons who has provided the much needed guidance and support and inspired confidence is long. However, the following deserve a special mention.

I am highly obliged to Shri Ram Saran, Former Deputy Economic Advisor, Ministry of Food and Agriculture, Government of India, for allowing me access to the data pertaining to the Farm Management Studies for the State of Punjab for the year 1956-57. This was in July 1965. My thanks are also due to Shri J.S. Sandhu, Economic Advisor, Punjab Government, for permitting me to use the data collected by the Economic and Statistical Organisation, Punjab for the purpose of studies in the 'Economics of Farm Management' and in the 'Economics of Tractor Cultivation'.

I am grateful to my respected teachers Dr K K Dewett and Dr J D Verma and also to Dr O P Bagai, Head, Department of Statistics, Punjab University and Dr J V Deshpandey for their valuable advice in the preparation of this study.

I express my deep sense of gratitude to my supervisors Dr B N Mehrotra and Dr S P Singh for their kind supervision and guidance. It was because of their effective guidance that the study could keep to the track and steer clear of various pitfalls.

I express my sincere and respectful thanks to Dr T N Kapur for the facilities provided to me for carrying on research for the present study. His keen and consistent interest in the progress of this study was a source of great encouragement and confidence.

I gratefully acknowledge the assistance rendered by Messrs S Behl and O P Kalra in the computational work connected with this study and by Shri B S Cheema in typing this thesis.

I thank all other friends of mine who have helped me in carrying this study to a finish. Needless to say, for any mistake or omission which a perusal of this study reveals, the responsibility is solely mine and the debt that I owe to my friends for making this study worth presentation is in no way scaled down.
