ACKNOWLEDGMENT

First and foremost, I extend my profound sense of gratitude to my supervisor, Prof. Sudhir Kumar, Head, Department of Evening Studies, Panjab University, Chandigarh, without whose supervision and able guidance, I could not have accomplished the research project. I am immensely indebted to him for his insightful suggestions to approach the issues involved in the project from Indian perspective. Besides, the completion of the thesis owes much to his patience and persistence.

I am also grateful to Prof. Harpreet Pruthi, Head, Department of English and Cultural Studies, Panjab University, Chandigarh, who, at my request, responded promptly to expedite the process and procedures required to submit the thesis within the stipulated time. I am also grateful to a number of other teachers from the Department of English, who helped and provided me with their key resource materials. From the Department of Philosophy, Prof. Dharmendra Goyal and Prof. Dharmanand Sharma deserve special thanks for their invaluable thoughts regarding the project.

As and when required, informal discussions with my friends Pankaj, Ravi, Lallan and Atma Ram were of great help. I am highly grateful to them. Help and support from Atul P. Bhardwaj, Gurmeet Singh, Vikrant, Suresh and Ambuj must be heartily acknowledged.

I owe a lot to Madam Madhu Kapoor and Aparna Kaushal for their encouragement and support. Gratitude is due to my friends Vijaya and Monika whose emotional support and intellectual stimulation kept me on course, especially at certain critical junctures.

I must express my sincere thanks to Tarun who edited and corrected the thesis with a deep sense of involvement at the eleventh hour. Mr. Narender Kumar deserves special thanks, for ransacking book-shops and libraries in Delhi and providing me relevant study material during the course of the project. And special thanks to Suraj Chopra who read my illegibly hand-written material and typed it meticulously, even during odd hours.

I am highly indebted to the members of my family for giving a helping hand at every step of my life.
