PREFACE

Indian Poetry in English after the fifties in which even the source material is in a state of flux poses many problems to the researcher. However, it offers the exciting opportunity for fresh insights in the attempt to break new ground.

I record with deep gratitude the help and encouragement given abundantly by Dr. T. Prabhakar, Professor and Head of the Department of English, who supervised this research programme. His practical advice and demand for excellence have been a constant source of inspiration in the planning and execution of this project. He has been most liberal in sparing his time and energy for helping me to overcome the many obstacles 'on the way'.

My grateful thanks are due to Dr. S. P. Appasamy, U.G.C. Professor in the University Department of English for his interest and guidance especially in the initial stages. To Dr. Nagarajan and Mr. Ekambaram of the University Department, I owe much for their ever-ready help and to Dr. C. T. Indra, for her constructive criticism and 'catalytic action'.

To the Principal and Management of Stella Maris College where I am employed, I express my gratitude for deputing me to do research under the UGC Faculty Improvement Programme. To my colleagues and students, I owe much for their insights and concern.
I am deeply grateful to these poets especially R. Parthasarathy and Nissim Ezekiel for sparing me the source material needed for the study. To Professor Ezekiel, my debt of gratitude is immense as he replied to all my letters, granted me a personal interview and gave valuable suggestions.

The help given by my husband S. Srinivasan can only be gratefully acknowledged.

My grateful thanks are due to M/s. Muthuswamy, Suhan and Rajendran for their devoted assistance in sharing the arduous task of preparing the typescript.
