ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I would like to acknowledge my deep sense of gratitude and indebtedness to my teacher and my guide Dr. C.A. Perumal, Professor and Head of the Department of Politics and Public Administration, University of Madras, for selecting me as a research scholar and for permitting me to work under his expert guidance. Right from the day the decision to work on this theme was taken, he took active and personal interest in my work and guided me with utmost interest and patience at every stage of this work. He put up with my failings, bore with patience my shortcomings and encouraged me to pursue my work with confidence. Inspite of his heavy schedule and academic responsibilities I got unfailing and prompt help from him throughout the period of my research programme and he unhesitatingly spared several hours for discussion sessions with me even during the hot summer vacations when Professors prefer to have a break from work. He is a hard task master and demands conscientious, prompt and first rate academic work from his scholars. It was a rare privilege and illuminating experience for me to learn under such a great teacher and it is very difficult to acknowledge what I owe to him in the preparation and the completion of this thesis which would have been impossible but for his inspiring guidance and unfailing support.
I would like to record my great sense of gratitude to my esteemed teacher, Dr. M. Abel, former Principal of Madras Christian College, Tambaram (now Vice-Chancellor of Sri Krishna Devaraya University, Ananthapur, Andhra Pradesh) without whose largeheartedness I would not have got study leave to pursue my research work under the able guidance of Dr. C.A. Perumal. I am ever grateful to him for his care, concern and goodwill for me.

I would also like to express my gratitude to my respected Professor J. Ramachandran, former Director of Collegiate Education (now Vice-Chancellor of Madurai Kamaraj University, Madurai) for granting me the necessary leave and for helping me to pursue my work.

I also like to thank Professor S. Balachandran, Dr. R. Balasubramaniam, and the members of the Department of Politics and Public Administration for their kind help and co-operation during my course in the Department.

I also remember with gratitude Dr. K. Seshadri, Professor of Political Science, Jawaharlal Nehru University, New Delhi, Dr. Divyan, Department of History, University of Madras and Professor A. Nagarajan, Principal, Government Arts College, Krishnagiri, and Rev. Duncan B. Forrester, and thank them for their valuable suggestions and advice.
