CONTENTS

ABSTRACT

CHAPTER I : INTRODUCTION

1.0. Overview 1

1.1. Motivation for the study 1

1.2. History of English Teaching in India 1

1.2.1. The Important Phases 1

1.2.2. The colonial ideology of English teaching/learning 5

1.2.2.1. Orientalism vs Anglicism 6

1.2.2.2. Utilitarianism vs Imperialism 9

1.2.2.3. Message vs Medium 13

1.2.3. Post-colonial era 14

1.2.3.1. Committees and Commissions 14

1.2.3.2. Approaches and Methods 17

1.3. Grammar and Composition in the Post-colonial scene 21

1.3.1. Grammar - ‘the unravished bride’ 21

1.3.2. ESL curriculum in India: Problems in defining the aims 24

1.3.3. Grammar, Composition and Examinations in the ESL curriculum 29

1.4. Scope of this thesis 32
CHAPTER II: THE GLOBAL SCENARIO

2.0. Overview 36

2.1. Grammar, grammar teaching and composition through the ages 37

2.1.1. Pre-Saussurean era 37

2.1.2. Saussurean era - The beginnings 38

2.1.3. Structuralists and their experiments 41

2.1.4. The Chomskyan Revolution 44

2.1.5. Communicative competence and thereafter 48

2.1.6. Notions of 'grammar' and 'composition' down the ages 59

2.1.7. The Indian scene 65

2.1.7.1. Overview 65

2.1.7.2. The beginning of English Language Teaching 66

2.1.7.3. Notions of 'grammar' and 'composition' 67

2.1.7.4. A critique of books on 'Grammar and Composition' 68

2.2. The Post-structuralist option 71

2.2.1. The perspective 71
2.2.2. 'Grammar' and 'Composition' — symmetrically asymmetrical or asymmetrically symmetrical 74
2.2.3. 'Knowledge - telling strategies' vs
Knowledge - discovering strategies 80
2.2.4. Process-centred paradigm vs Product-
centred paradigm 83
2.2.5. Learner as consumer vs Learner as producer 87
2.3. Review 92

CHAPTER III : THE PROJECT

3.0. Overview 93
3.1. The pilot project 94
3.1.1. Details of the field work 94
3.1.2. A note on the text-book 94
3.1.3. A note on the question-paper pattern 95
3.1.4. Writing-Is it an exercise in reproduction? 96
3.1.5. A profile of the students 97
3.2. Analysis One : Texts produced by the
'Control group' 98
3.2.1. Overview 98
3.2.1.1. A note on the selection of scripts for analysis 99
3.2.2. General observations 99
3.2.2.1. 'Accuracy' in 'sentence grammar' 99
3.2.2.2. Avoidance strategy
3.2.2.3. 'Ideology bound' writing
3.2.2.4. 'Consistency building' in 'composing'
3.2.2.5. Problems in discourse organization
3.2.2.6. A 'recipe' for 'writing'
3.2.3. Specific observations
3.2.3.1. Error-free 'grammar' and error-laden language
3.2.3.2. Use of 'articles'
3.2.3.3. Simple passivisation
3.3. Analysis Two: 'Texts' produced by the 'Experimental group'
3.3.1. Overview
3.3.2. Why group work?
3.3.3. Creating stories from stories
3.3.4. Dialogue - writing
3.3.5. Letter - writing
3.3.6. Extension of the text
3.3.7. Parallel writing
3.3.8. Comparative assessment
3.3.8.1. A study of the scripts of the same learner
3.3.8.2. A study of the scripts of the two groups
3.3.9. Evaluation of the 'experiment'
3.4. A critique of the analyses
3.5. Analysis in social sciences
   3.5.1. Analysis and synthesis
   3.5.2. Deduction and induction
   3.5.3. Measurement
   3.5.4. Statistical methods
   3.5.5. Is quantification possible in ESL experiments?
3.6. Review

CHAPTER IV

CONCLUSION

APPENDIX I : Semester Examination Question Paper
APPENDIX II : Response Sheets of the control group
APPENDIX III : Tasks given to the control group
APPENDIX IV : Creating stories from stories
APPENDIX V : Dialogue - writing
APPENDIX VI : Letter - writing
APPENDIX VII : Extension of the text
APPENDIX VIII
&
APPENDIX IX : Parallel writing
APPENDIX X : Comparative assessment
REFERENCES
BIBLIOGRAPHY