Acknowledgements

There are a number of people who deserve recognition, and should be acknowledged and thanked for the support, assistance and encouragement they gave me during this journey of academic endeavor.

A debt of gratitude goes to my supervisor Dr. Maheshchandra P. Joshi for everything. It was his unconditional support, motivation, enthusiasm and above all his direct approach to what to me was a daunting task that fostered and maintained the commitment and dedication needed for such a journey of discovery. I’ve learned a lot from him. To you Dr. Maheshandra P. Joshi, I simply say “thank you” for everything and for the inspiration you have given me.

In any journey of discovery there are many people who join the adventure. People who for no reason other than to offer help, respective person of visited outsourcing accounting services providers of USA and India, relatives, friendship and yes even criticism are crucial to the eventual end of the road trip.

These people have contributed in so many and numerous ways to this research study that it is impossible to adequately express my feelings for them. Their contributions (both large and small) have combined to bring this journey to an end, and I will be eternally grateful to them all. These people comprise relatives, colleagues, friends and respective person of visited outsourcing accounting service providers of USA and India. To all of these people I can only say “thank you”.

It is said that behind every great man there is a great woman. Well I may not be great man, but I certainly do have a great women behind me. My mother Suman, wife Nivedita and sister Vaishali has been beside me all the way on this journey, and without them by my side this dissertation would not have come to fruition. Their love, drive, motivation, patience and unending confidence in me and my ability to complete this study have at times been the only thing that kept me going. “Thank you”.
