ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

In writing this thesis I have benefitted from the advice, support and encouragement from a number of people. To these good friends, I owe my gratitude:

➢ First and foremost, I wish to thank my Supervisor Dr. C.T. Indra, Professor and Head, Department of English, University of Madras for her invaluable help and enthusiasm when confronted with the problem of processing a thesis in a contemporary area of study for which sufficient research material was not easily accessible. Without Dr. C.T. Indra’s confident support, wisdom, energy and love – this project would never have happened. I would like to place on record her zealous and earnest commitment to research study in the English department, which has evolved as a rich and stimulating experience of sharing and learning. As I value greatly her insight and intelligence, I feel honoured to have received direction from her.

➢ I take this opportunity to extend my thanks to the University of Madras, Chennai for granting me the University Research Fellowship. The support was of great assistance.

➢ My thanks are due to the largesse of the British Council, Chennai Division, for awarding me the Charles Wallace India Trust Scholarship to Oxford, UK. The visit enabled me to collect recent critical material which was so essential in sharpening and informing my thesis. I also value the experience of interacting with contemporary writers and academicians which proved extremely beneficial to my research study. I would like to thank Dr. Taylor of the Charles Wallace India Trust, UK, for providing this wonderful opportunity for me.
A very special word of thanks goes to Dr. Vicki Bertram — whose work in the field of contemporary women's poetry is highly acclaimed in Britain — for consenting to over-view my dissertation. Bertram's assessment of the thesis was perceptive and her invaluable advice helped much in shaping the contexts and ideas in the dissertation.

At the British Council, Chennai Division, I have received a continuous supply of ideas through discussions and conversations. My thanks are due to the British Council Poetry Circle, in particular, which lent a performative angle to my experience of teaching and reading poetry. It was a stimulating forum which allowed for a translation of ideas from page to stage. A very special word of thanks to Yog Japee, Krishna Kumar, Bhagirathi Narayan, Siddhi Japee, Rashmi Devadasan, Raghu Aluvalia, Anuradha Anant and Indrani Krishnaier for their insightful comments and views during the readings.

A heartfelt thanks goes to Rath Jafar, Manager, Arts, Culture and English Studies (South India), The British Council, whose passion for poetry ("soul-stuff" as she termed it) and her keen interest in the matters related to contemporary multi-cultural Britain played a motivating role in my dissertation. I am grateful to her for her positive outlook and assistance throughout this venture.

A special thanks to Eunice Crook, Director of the British Council, Chennai for her cheerful support and constant encouragement in this particular endeavour.

I wish to thank the British Council Library, Chennai, the University of Madras Library, Chennai, The American Research Centre, Hyderabad, The United States Information Services Library, Chennai, London University Library, UK, Corpus Christi College Library, Oxford, The Bodleian Library, Oxford, UK, for all the invaluable resources I have collected from them.
My gratitude to all at the English Department, University of Madras – Dr. Rajani, Dr. Azhagarasan, Prof. Eugenie Pinto, Dr. Nigel Joseph, Mr. S. Thirumavalavan and Mr. V. Kothandapani, whose help and support came to me in several different ways. A very special thanks to Nagaradhika, Padma V. and Yasmin Thattil who made a superb team of an Editorial collective and helped speed up the production of the thesis.

I am particularly indebted to Yasmin Thattil for her undying enthusiasm and helpful directions especially in the editing stage of the thesis.

I am immensely grateful to Shamila Pushparaj from the Gurukul Lutheran Theological College & Research Institute for her consistent and meticulous technical work which was responsible for bringing out this thesis within the stipulated time.

On the personal front, I want to acknowledge with warm gratitude the support and encouragement I received from my husband, Raj, throughout this enterprise. To Sushil and Roshan – my dear sons for their concern and love at all times. A huge thanks to all the members of my family particularly my late mother and my brother for the unfailing love and confidence they place in me in every endeavour of mine.

Finally, a profound thanks to my dad – Dr. K. Rajaratnam, who motivated, inspired and supported me at every stage in the making of the thesis. To him, I dedicate this doctoral dissertation.
