Acknowledgements

The period of writing this thesis has also been a period of learning to live differently. Various people have helped me during the years of oscillation between fervent hope and utter dejection, both academically and personally. I wish to thank

- my supervisor, Prof. Susie Tharu, for her incomparable intellectual support and stimulation. For patience, understanding, friendship and, above all, for her faith in me.

- Anveshi Research Centre for Women’s Studies and all my friends there: Bhagya, Chaitanya, Geeta, Jaya, Lalita, Mary, Poroma, Rama, Sajaya, Sailaja, Shital, Sreefakshmi, Sunitha, Teju, Uma, Vasanta, Veena, Vidya, Viji, Vijaya, and all others, for the shared context of feminism.

- Centre for the Study of Culture and Society, Bangalore, for use of their library and for providing a space outside Hyderabad where I could feel welcome. M. Madhava Prasad for the tips that pulled me out of the stand-still I had come to with the last chapter. S.V. Srinivas for the occasional photocopies, and for the more frequent (and irritating) question “when are you completing?”

- The CIEFL library staff, especially Satyanarayana, for diving into that dusty ocean and retrieving books whenever needed.

- Sabina, Deepa, Madhu, Jenny, Anuradha Rao, Biju for help with editing, printing and other pangs of submission.

- Anita, Manohar, Deepa, Satish, Murali, Madhu, Prasad, Asma and Deeptha for providing the intellectual space within which many of my half-baked ideas were formed, for intellectual and non-intellectual camaraderie.

- Soma, for support in crisis, and Annu, Chitra, Ira, Sabina, Kshema, Mridula, Madhu, Kavitha, Preeta, Swati, Susheel, Jai, Pavan for a wonderful time on campus.

- The CIEFLPA for the political space it provided.

- Bhargavi for showing me how to deal with my fear of “the bell jar.” For support throughout.

- Rekha and Vasudha for friendship and loyalty (and all those “girls’ nights out”).

- Sukanya for providing a place to run to in times of need, and for those always available hugs.

- Jenny, samaana hridaya, for being there, mostly.

- Srivats and Harris for caring, always.

- Raghu and Babu for, well, various things.
- Pramod Davar, Ravi Dhawala, Jim, Miko and Jomo for putting up with my invasions into their families.
- Jayan, Dori, Charan, Prasad, Ravi, Anita, Gayathri and Benji for all those evenings together.
- Rajesh for shared fears and fantasies, for friendship unmodified.

The final days of completing this thesis were, to put it simply, hectic. Doubts and jubilation were constant companions. It would not have been possible to endure the strain without the crucial support and friendship of two people. I want to specially thank

- Vijay for all the help with proof reading the entire thesis, checking each and every page, taking innumerable print-outs, putting up with my tantrums, and listening to all the crazy talk.
- Manolo for the space where I could run to in momentary attempts to forget the thesis, for the drinks, the music, and many more things than I can count, for generally hanging in there with me.

And a very special thanks to

- daddy, amma and chechi, for trying to understand my struggle between what I am and what they would have liked me to be. Kannan, for that unconditional love. Raviyettan, for his characteristic silent support.
