ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I owe my gratitude and thanks to several people for their best wishes, blessings, loving guidance, and who have been a great source of support and strength throughout my Ph.D. journey. I first thank my Advisor, Prof. Sangeetha Menon, for her constant guidance, encouragement, and support. With her positive outlook, commitment, and dedication, she helped me lay a solid research foundation, and has constantly inspired me to think beyond customary parameters. I am grateful to her for sustaining my deep interest in the study of the self and in Indian Psychology. Working with her has given me many constructive opportunities to enrich my learning, both professionally and personally, impelling my research journey from being a mere thesis into a truly experiential quest and search for the self.

My deep thanks goes to my Doctoral Committee members and Expert Advisors. At NIAS, I have learnt a lot from Prof. B.V. Sreekantan, and have been inspired by his personal discipline, and his scholarship in various fields. My gratitude to him for keenly following my research and raising thought-provoking questions. Prof. Malavika Kapur has greatly encouraged, supported, and made discerning suggestions throughout my research phase, giving me scope to improve on my ideas.

Dr. H. S. Ashok, (Chairman of Department of Psychology, at Bangalore University), has mentored me from the initial stages of the research proposal until the final thesis. To him I owe special thanks for his constant and prompt guidance, and valuable insights. Prof. Ajit K. Dalal (Dept of Psychology, Allahabad University) and Prof. S.K. Kiran Kumar (Dept. of Psychology, Mysore University) have been Expert Advisors. I am indebted to Prof. Dalal for the deep interest he has taken in my research work and for his invaluable advice to help me chart the course of the thesis. Prof. Kiran Kumar has been supportive and has taken great interest in the thesis work, and given me valuable inputs throughout.

I thank Dr. V. S. Ramamurthy, present Director of NIAS, for his support and encouragement. My gratitude goes to Dr. K. Kasturirangan, the previous Director of NIAS, who has been constantly encouraging. My thanks to the National Institute of Advanced Studies (NIAS) for giving me an opportunity to be in the Ph.D. Programme, and for extending various facilities and resources to help me in the research journey. I thank Prof. Anindya Sinha (Academic Dean) who has taken time to attend my colloquia, given keen suggestions and different perspectives and much encouragement right from the initial stages. My thanks to Dr. Shivali Tukdeo, (Academic Head) for her very helpful inputs. Thanks to Dr. Rajesh Kasturirangan whose passionate interest in the Mahābhārata along with his inputs created a stimulating research environment. My thanks to Dr. Carol Upadhyya, Dr. Dilip Ahuja, Dr. M. G. Narasimhan, Dr. Sharada Srinivasan, and Prof. Ramani at NIAS for their interest and support. I deeply thank Dr. Arindam Chakrabarti, who even in a short while at NIAS, shared scholarly insights and gave invaluable academic guidance, strongly encouraging the research I have undertaken. My deep thanks also to Prof.
Sundar Sarukkai for laying the ground for philosophical thinking.

My very special thanks to the NIAS library, Ms Hamsa Kalyani and Ms Vijayalakshmi who have responded promptly to all requests for books, material and resources, and also for being extremely supportive. I thank Mr. Bhaskar and other library staff for their help.

I am extremely grateful to Ms J.N. Sandhya and have insufficient words to thank her for looking after all the administrative details, allowing me to freely pursue my research activities. I am grateful to Mr. Srinivas Aithal, Administrative Head, for his efficiency and ensuring me a smooth process all through. Mr. A. Devaraju and Mr.
K.S. Ramakrishna have readily complied and executed all requests and a big thank you to them. I am grateful to all the administrative staff at NIAS. Mr. C. Shashidharan and Mr. V.A. Ramesh deserve special mention and my gratitude for their continuous support.

Rolla Das, has been with me from the very first day at NIAS and we have shared several ups and downs of a research student. I cannot thank Rolla enough for being my friend, colleague, confidante, and always walking with me. My deep thanks to Naresh Keerthi for the very many stimulating discussions, ideas, and support.
Without the true and heartfelt support of my colleagues and friends, my research work would not have come to this present stage. I sincerely and affectionately thank R.
Maithreyi, Namitha Kumar, Dr. Shankar Rajaraman, Dr. Aneesha Sharma, for spontaneously helping me tide over the many pitfalls. I thank Dr. Jafar Kizhakkethil, Dr. Meera Baindur, Dr. M.B. Rajani, Sajini Anand, and all the past and present students at NIAS for their constant support. I am deeply indebted to H. R. Meera and Prof. K. S. Kannan for their encouragement. My special thanks to Meera for her invaluable help in bringing out the thesis in its final format.

I am deeply grateful to Prof. K. Ravichandra and Prof. C. Vijayasree of Osmania University who were instrumental in leading me to the doctorate programme with their conviction and belief, and their deep affection for me. I have no words to thank them enough. I thank Dr. A.V. Subbayya, a scholar who is well-versed in the Mahābhārata, for his encouraging comments. I deeply thank Sindhu Kasi for rising to the occasion and helping me through hectic schedules.

My family has been the fulcrum and bedrock through my life and through the entire doctorate phase. My parents are a constant source of emotional strength. They have from my childhood instilled a deep love for learning and always encouraged my academic and life pursuits in various fields. This thesis would not have come to shape but for their love and blessings for me. I am very fortunate to have the blessings and affection of my parents-in-law who have greatly supported and stood by me throughout. My brother, family and my extended family have been very supportive throughout. Although they are not named here, my gratitude extends to many more family members and friends.

Finally, most important are my husband, Krishna Panyam, and my children Soumya and Dhruva who have stood by me, bearing the ecstasies and agonies, the twists and turns, and carried me through the rigours of research. Words are inadequate to express my thanks for their unflinching love as only they could give. They are an intricate, inextricable part of me.

I dedicate this thesis to Krishna, Soumya, and Dhruva – my future selves.
