Acknowledgement

There are a number of people who have been important in the completion of this dissertation, both academically and personally. This work, and the time that I have spent engaged in research and writing, would have been much inferior without them. I owe them a great deal.

At the very beginning I must submit myself before the fraternity of the Department of Anthropology for providing me such a great ambience to work with. I am greatly indebted to them all. First I must express my heartfelt gratitude to Prof. Mini Bhattacharyya, Head of this department, for supporting me all needs in the department. This work would not have been possible without her support.

Prof. D.K. Medhi has been my teacher since my post-graduation and eventually become my guidance in doctoral research in this department. He has taught me more about archaeology than has anyone else and his professional and personal standards would be an example to any student. It has been a great privilege to work with him.

Prof. Birinchi K. Medhi, former head of the Department of Anthropology, and a retired professor, had also been my teacher since my M.A and eminent member of the doctoral committee and the assistance and guidance he has given me not only in my research but also the off field etiquette has been invaluable. It was he who let me got down to the nitty-gritty of research and a fine detail of his pen-work is his speciality and it has entrenched me a great deal. He has been my teacher and my philosopher.

My work has, since the conception of the ideas, been carried on within the framework of Anthropological research approach. The moral and academic support of the other faculties of the Department has been immense and instrumental in this regard. Most of the ideas expressed in this dissertation developed in the course of discussions, interactions and suggestions with these faculties who are all my teachers since my Post-graduation. Among them Prof. Rekha Das, former head of the Department, Prof. B. Choudhory, and Dr. A.A. Ashraf, Associate professor of this department are the ones who always stood through thick and thin, though the contributions of other faculties are equally invaluable in the completion of the work. I owe them a great deal.
I am very much grateful to Prof. A.C. Bhagawati, honorary co-ordinator and head of the division of Indira Gandhi National centre for the Arts, Northeastern Region, for his ardently ever inquisitive with the progress of my research, who also never feel exhausted of suggesting me as to what data to be generated and retrieved for the adequate fulfillment of the very aim of my research. It was he who timely ever offer valuable suggestions and at the same time constructively criticized my ideas. I am greatly indebted to him.

I must also acknowledge my gratitude and thank to Dr. S. Phukan and Dr. J.J. Laskar, both are Assistant professors, department of geology, for kindly assisting me in the XRD analysis of pottery and clay samples leading to the interpretations of the same in addition to solving the technical problems of stratigraphical matrix of the excavation. I am also thankful to Dr. Sidananda Sarma, scientific officer, department of physics, IIT Guwahati, for meticulously conducting the XRD test of the pottery and clay samples within a short period of time. I offer my deep sense of gratitude to them.

It will be injustice on my part without offering my grateful thank to Dr. Robindra Teron, Assistant Professor, Department of Life Science, Assam University, Diphu Campus, for his kind offering the valuable information on the ethnobotany of the Karbi. I express my sincere thanks to him. I am also thankful to Mr. K Singha, a research scholar, Deptt. of Geography, for helping me prepared the digital elevation model of map showing the study area.

I am very much indebted to the people of the area where the research had been conducted. The completion of this work cannot be visualized without the priceless cooperation and help of the villagers. There were many people who had directly or indirectly cooperated in the course of this field work without acknowledging my deep sense of gratitude, it will morally and ethically be deeply injustice. First I would like to acknowledge my gratitude to the people of Bichhikri who had not only granted me permission to conduct excavation but also themselves cooperated with me in many of the execution of the fieldwork. They also allowed me to take necessary measurement on Neolithic artefacts at their disposal. Next I would like to offer my gratitude to the people of Dikisir for their kind cooperation and permission to conduct exploration in their private land and also accompanying to the forest of Punja Hill for wild rice observation. I must offer my thanks to the people of Laram and Longle-Ethan for their cooperation and allowing me to observe in their shifting cultivation practices. Equally I must also offer my thanks to the people of Morten for giving me Tiwa farming terminologies particularly to Mr. Sanu Puma and equally I must offer my gratitude to the people of Khanduli particularly to Mr. Gildinus Myrten for providing me Jaintia’s farming vocabularies. My heartfelt gratitude goes to all the people. There were many people who had directly involved with my research work but due to the limitation of space it will not be possible to mention each one of their name in particular. My inability is deeply regretted.

The department of Anthropology has been a good place to conduct research, largely because of the qualities of the staffs and students. The staffs of the department, particularly Mr. G. Choudhory, Mr. T. Das and Mr. D. Kayastha, have provided me a great deal of help during the course of my research programme, in the preparation of the laboratory works and in dealing with official matters.

I also would like to offer my sincere thanks to the authority of the University of Gauhati for affording the necessary facilities for carrying out my research. I should be failing in my duty if I do not convey my sincere thanks to all those who in some way or other helped me in the pursuit of my studies.

The best thing that had happened to me over the course of my doctoral programme has nothing to do with my dissertation at all. It was the simple words of ‘go ahead’ of my father which turned a guiding spirit but sadly he died before the completion of the work. Humbly dedicating this work in loving memory to my beloved parents in Heaven.
