ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

So many different people, in so many different ways, at so many different stages have helped me prepare this dissertation, that it is hardly possible for me to claim sole authorship of the present work. Like the varied notes of an enchanting music and the myriad colours that merge to produce the dazzling light, their contribution, though not easily discernible, is the very stuff this dissertation is built on. And here, I'd like to name a few of them and gratefully acknowledge all that they have been and done to me.

First, let me single out my guide, Dr. A. Joseph for accepting to guide me, for the committed interest in the topic, for his ready availability and for his encouragement and suggestions, without which this work would not have seen the light of day. Dr. K. Chellappan, the head of the department of English, Bharathidasan University, deserves my sincere thanks for allowing me to register and work for Ph.D. in the department of English.

I'd also like to thank Mr. Robert Bellarmine, of the British council, who got me interested in the challenges and relevance of ELT for India. I've always found in him a friend and a confidant who has assisted me in ever so many ways to complete my work in time. To him and his able team in the Council, I owe a lot.

The Jesuit community, Fr. Principal and the faculty of English, St. Joseph's college, Trichy deserve a special thanks for all the assistance they have provided me during these years of my research.

I am also indebted to the staff of CIEFL, Hyderabad, for the genuine interest and encouragement, and especially for permitting me to use, so often their splendid library. For the same reason I thank the ELT faculty of the Polytechnic of West London.

Besides my guide, it was Mr. Joe Durairaj, of the Gandhigram Rural University who patiently plodded through my manuscript offering suggestions and making corrections. Joe had also worked with me in two projects for the slow learners and has served as a sounding board for my ideas. I thank Joe, most sincerely.

I also wish to thank, Rev. Fr. M. Devadoss S.J. and the Jesuit curia at Dindigul for letting me use their EDP centre and M/s. Joseph & Co., Trichy, who gave the loose sheets of papers an attractive appearance.

Francis Peter.
