Acknowledgements

I would like to take this opportunity to thank all those without whose support, this work would not have been possible. At the outset, I remember with gratitude three very special people: my father Dr S.Gupta and my ex-Principal Dr. M.R. Kurup, both of whom continue to inspire me by their example and who had been persistently urging me to attain a doctoral degree, and Dr. Nilufer Bharucha who introduced me to British Asian fiction in 1995.

I would like to express my gratitude to my guide Dr. Mala Pandurang whose active guidance, infinite patience and dedication to academics have been truly inspiring. She has taught me the art of thinking with a long-range vision and foresight, and the art of writing with clarity and conviction. The hours we have spent thinking out the finer aspects of the thesis have been as stimulating as the actual writing. Her own engagement with the subject have provided scope for argument and debate, in which she has been an impartial and encouraging participant. She has guided me not to go overboard with my enthusiasm, and showing me how to substantiate my own standpoint with reference to contemporary thought. With every consideration for my personal comfort, my college hours and my commitments at home, she has been the motive force for a timely and satisfactory completion of this thesis. I am touched by the openness with which she has lent me reference material for my thesis, and shared contacts for the least of my doubts. I am confident of having gained a friend and mentor in Dr Mala Pandurang and value her influence on me as a very special gift.

I would like to thank the staff of the English Department, the library staff, the accounts and office staff at the S.N.D.T. University for their co-operation. I also wish to acknowledge the contribution of the Principal of my college Dr. G.T. Paratkar for words of motivation and encouragement, and for recommending me to obtain the U.G.C. sponsored Faculty Improvement Programme which gave me uninterrupted study leave for two years.

I thank the Librarian of Kelkar College, Dr. Karmarkar, the staff of The Asiatic Society Library, The British Council Library, especially Girish Kunkur, The American Centre Library in Mumbai, and SOAS Library, London. I would also like to thank The National Library at Calcutta, for allowing me to borrow a completely brittle book on Toru Dutt. I am indeed humbled by the extraordinary care taken for old and rare books, by the Asiatic Society staff, and those at the National Library.
My colleagues Susmita Dey, Shubhangi Karnik and Dinesh Kumar in the English Department, Kelkar College, Mumbai, have always supported me very actively, from occasionally sharing their views on the critical theories or approaches used in the thesis, to proof-reading, lending study material and allowing me to work undisturbed for two years when they often worked overtime. I will always be inspired by their warmth, kindness and cooperation, which makes our workplace so special. I would also remember the help of Uttara Sahasrabuddhe and Preeta Nilesh who have been sounding boards for ideas and locating sources, and have always thoughtfully invited me to seminars relevant to my work.

I sincerely thank Lyn Innes (UKC, Kent), Rachel Dwyer and Amina Yaquin (SOAS, London) for granting me personal interviews in May, 2006, which helped me in thinking through this thesis and clarifying so many doubts. I must thank Parvati Raghuram of the Open University, UK, for allowing access to unpublished material from her forthcoming book, which has helped a lot in formulating the approach to the aesthetics of British Asian writing.

I wish to acknowledge the consistent and dependable support of Archana Gawde and Suman Gaekwad who kept our home smiling in my “absence”.

I would like to record my special feeling of gratitude to my two daughters who have actually bound this thesis with all their love and care; forgoing little pleasures and outings; reading some of the texts and offering their precious insights. My husband has consistently provided strength, support and inspiration by his undemanding presence, looked after the children fondly, and readily shared chores and duties. He would be shy of any acknowledgement, and therefore deserves more. I must thank my sister, my sister-in-law and their families, for their support, specially during my stay in England, for sending me nearly all my primary texts, and just for their special love and affection for me. Thanks also to my nephews and nieces for showing me how their multiple existences as British Asians make their gifted personalities so remarkable, and so inspirational to me for theorising diaspora. A special thanks to you, family.

I dedicate this thesis to my parents who always inspired me, and my Mama, my uncle and guru. This thesis is to live up to their hopes and to seek their blessings to make more worthwhile contribution to academics in future.
