ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

Writing a dissertation is a quest in itself and at the end of it, I feel grateful at the strong feeling of humility and joy energising my state of mind. The experience has been potentially rich and rewarding. It has definitely opened new vistas of awareness of the creative word. The sharp-edged, scintillating roads of research and criticism notwithstanding, I have gained immensely in cultivating a new admiration and affection for creativity.

My sense of gratitude to Dr. K.N. Amathri is deep and immense. His insight into my problems and his understanding compassion did not only help me in my work, but also entered my experience with the power of sustaining itself as a permanent gain.

I had the privilege and pleasure of learning from discussion with various persons. I feel proud in recording my gratitude to them.

To my father, Mr. Parmanda Sharan who led me by the hand into the intricate world of Buddhism and the immediate access to him helped me in various processes of thought and language.

To Dr. Sun P. Banjan, Professor and Head, Department of English, U.P. University, who initiated me into the eclectic world of scholarship. His is In Virgil-Dante presence in the University.
A few words with him in a corridor, a cafe or the department helped me many a time to find the way out of the darkening chamber of maiden-thought.

To my colleagues Profs. P.K.Sharma, H.M.Dahi, Varinder Parmer, Lakshmi Saini, who very kindly shared with me readings of the earlier drafts.

To Harsh, SUNE, Buffalo and T.S.Anand, Maltese
College, Lucknow for their timely offer of books
I needed.

To the American Studies Research Centre for sending me books and xerographed material at my request.

To Principal Dr. Atma Ram for generously extending me the library facilities.

To Sudhir Bansal who typed the thesis with meticulous care and intelligence.

To my wife, Madhu whose healthy co-operation helped me in a tremendous way.

My thanks must not remain unrecorded to all the writers and friends whose names I may fail to mention here but without them, my understanding of the subject would have been poorer.
