ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

A research study such as this is rarely, if ever, accomplished without guidance, assistance and inspiration rendered from various quarters. It is only right that, people who assist in the completion of such tasks, be mentioned. For such is the folly of mankind that, inspite of massive contributions from masses, one can only offer a word of thanks.

Fertiliser Marketing system in India evolved with significant contribution from the cooperatives. These democratic institutions played important role in fertiliser distribution until late sixties when private trading was allowed. Since then, share of the fertilisers marketed through cooperatives have gradually declined. It needed in-depth study to identify the reasons and take remedial steps. I am grateful to Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar Marathwada University, Aurangabad for allowing me to undertake the research work in this field.

I am beholden to my guide Dr. Wilkanth G. Bapat, Professor, Department of Commerce, Dr. Babasaheb Ambedkar Marathwada University, Aurangabad for his encouragement and motivation throughout, to make this research work more clear and consistent. Despite pre-engagements in various academic tasks, he responded generously to all my requests and relentlessly guided me till completion of this study. His uncorruptible ear for cliche, non-sequitur and bombast, and uncompromising demand for logic in argument and presentation have benefited every page.

I also express my sincere appreciation for Head, Department of Commerce for his permission to use computer and other facilities in the department. My sincere thank also goes to the University Library and its staff. Without their help I could not have access to the valuable data and text available there.

Special mention must also be made of various departments and organisations which helped to complete the work. These include, Departments of Agriculture, Economics & Statistics, Marketing and Cooperation, Government of Maharashtra, Pune. I am also grateful to the institutions like NCUI, NCDC, FAI, New Delhi, VAMNICON-Pune, NABARD, MSCB, DCCBs, RRBs and other institutions from where secondary data is gathered. Numerous cooperative scholars, authors, practitioners and management experts also deserve my appreciation for providing help through their articles, comments during verbal discussions.
The people from whom, I have collected the primary data can not be mentioned by names. They are my respondents, that is, source of information and have a right to privacy. I extend my heartfelt thanks to all those farmers, private dealers and cooperative society personnel in Marathwada region, without whom this research study would not have been possible.

All my friends, well wisher and relatives, consistently helped with encouragement and criticism throughout the long period of gestation. I did not always welcome their exhortation, "Try again - you can do better". But, in the end it is clear that, the study owe a great deal to it and so do I. My wife deserves a word of mention for her help and continuous inspiration. Despite many odds, she alongside with my son patiently waited for this work to end.

Mrs. Kavita and Mr. Sudhir K. Patojoshi computed the information and processed the data. Both of them printed countless drafts, copied with inexhaustible patience, hard work and suffered with me throughout all the stages of work. They deserve my warmest thanks.

Finally, my special thanks to Mr. Ashok Dahale who designed, printed and gave final shape to the thesis.
