Acknowledgements

During the slow and often interrupted evolution of this thesis, I have accumulated many debts, only a portion of which I have space to acknowledge here.

A first debt is to my Research Supervisor Dr. Sherine Upot, whose intellectual and emotional support made it possible for this thesis to survive. The anxieties and despair that are probably part and parcel of a researcher’s baggage, also took their toll. But Sherine, not just my guide, but my good friend as well, gave me the moral backing that saw me through this enterprise.

Of at least equal importance has been Dr. P.P. Raveendran, to whom I am obliged for the choice of the topic and several hours of patient hearings of my rather naive doubts/questions.

If it wasn’t for my Principal, Dr. Sr. Ancilla’s persuasions, I would not have ventured on that crucial two-year F.I.P. I am thankful to her for her support. I am indebted to Dr. M.D. Radhika, the Head of the Department English, Providence Women’s College, who was instrumental in my registering part-time for research. I am grateful to her for the inspiring discussions, timely clarifications and generous access to her wonderful library. My colleagues and friends have been my ‘cheer leaders’ who made the journey bearable.

I must place on record, the support I have received from the staff at SCILET, American College, Madurai; the Librarian, School of Letters, M.G.University; the staff at the Central Library and the English Department Library, University of Calicut and the Library Staff, Providence Women’s College. I am grateful to Dr. Sreedevi and Prof. Abdul Jaleel of the Department of English, Calicut University, for their kindness and encouragement. I have to mention the expertise of Balu and team, and Remna in literally ‘materializing’ my hard work. I can’t thank Dr. Salil Varma enough for scanning my thesis and drawing my attention to numerous oversights.

And for bearing with mood swings, neglected chores and many sacrifices, I am grateful to my family. How do I say “thanks” to my mother, my husband Ajayan, our children Sreedevi and Anand; to my tolerant parents-in-law; to Balettan and Chandini for chipping in when I needed to leave home...

The trek has been long and weary. On my way I have gathered painful memories of good friends and well wishers who are no more. I remember them all. One force that has drawn me on in this onerous exercise, is the image of my father who dreamt big for me. The best I can do today is to dedicate this thesis to his beloved memory.

And above all, I reaffirm my trust in the Almighty
