ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

Many persons and organisations played a role in the development and writing of this thesis. My deepest debt is owed to Dr. R. D. Pathak, Professor (Management), Indore, my guide, under whose able guidance I have been able to complete my work. He was a constant source of inspiration and courage for me. He showed me a light and advised me to fix priorities in life, and it is only this advice which motivated me, to undertake a study of this kind, and complete it successfully. I find no words to thank Dr. Pathak for the unusual inspiration and supervision which I have received from him during this Doctoral Research.

I am thankful to the professional accountants, whom I interviewed and gave their valuable suggestions. My thanks are due to other organisations and individuals covered during client survey part, with out whose kind cooperation this study would have not been possible.

Thanks are also due to the Institute of Chartered Accountants, Delhi and various other functionaries of Northern Regional Council, Delhi, who cooperated in allowing library consultations to me, and helped in providing addresses and arranging meetings with the professionals to be surveyed.

I am also greatful to Mr. M. M. Singhal, and other colleague of Faculty of Managements Studies, Delhi University, Delhi Who helped me a lot in completion of my this doctoral work, and allowing to make use of their computer facilities and the like.

I thank all my colleagues here in the Department of Business Management for extending their kind Co-Operation from time to time from every angle. I am, specially, thankful to Mr. Ganga Ram Sharma, Steno of the department who helped in typing my rough manuscript.

My over-riding debts is to my wife, Sunita, who provided me the time, support and inspiration needed to prepare this thesis. It is truly our work.

I intend to keep learning.
