II. General Studies and Criticism

Allen, Walter. The English Novel. Penguin, 1954.

(Allen answers Forster's charge against Scott, "he has neither artistic detachment nor passion" and analyses Scott's historical novels. He points out that Scott 'without being in the strict sense an historian, revolutionised the writing of history' and that Scott's greatness lies in his 'great gallery of characters shaped by an historic living past'.)

Allott, Miriam. Novelists on the Novel. London: Routledge and Kegan Paul, 1959.

Amur, G.S. Manohar Malgonkar. N. Delhi: Arnold Heinemann India, 1973.

Bombay: Orient Longman, 1959.

Baker, Ernest A. Guide to Historical Fiction. London: George Routledge and Sons Ltd., 1914.

--"-- The History of the English Novel, vol. VI. New York: Barnes and Noble, Inc., 1969.

(Provides a general analysis of the romantic background behind the rise and growth of the historical novel as a genre and the historical novels of Sir Walter Scott. After analysing Scott's novels individually, Baker provides an insight into Scott's greatness as a novelist in a separate chapter 'Scott as a Novelist'.)

Kaye, Mollie M. Shadow of the Moon (1957). Penguin, 1980.

Leisy, Ernest E. The American Historical Novel. Norman: The Uni. of Oklahoma Press, 1950.

(Provides answers to some pertinent questions related to the historical novel and analyses the American historical novels chronologically. Leisy's classification of the modern American historical fiction is very useful.)

Liddell, Robert. A Treatise on the Novel. London: Jonathan Cape, 1955.

Litz, A. Walton. Modern American Fiction: Essays in Criticism.

New York: OUP, 1970.

Lively, Robert A. Fiction Fights the Civil War. Chapel Hill: The Uni. of North Carolina Press, 1957.

(Lively considers the war novel as a type of the historical novel and while analysing the war novels about the American Civil War, shows that the interpretation has varied with different historical novels during different times.)

Logasa, Hannah. Guide to Junior Historical Fiction, 7th ed. Philadelphia:

Mekinley Publishing ~~House~~ Co., 1960.

(A useful annotated bibliography of historical fiction with an equally useful introduction giving the nature of the historical fiction and its benefits to teaching history.)

Lohia, Rammanohar. Guilty Men of India's Partition. Hyderabad:

Rammanohar Lohia Samata Vidyalaya, Nyas, 1970.

Lubbock, Percy. The Craft of Fiction. London: Jonathan Cape, 1965.

Lukacs, Georg. The Historical Novel, trans. Hannah and Stanley Mitchell.

Penguin, 1959.

(Provides an altogether radical interpretation of the rise and growth of the historical novel; shows that the historical novel is an extension of the novel of manners of the 18th century. Though heavily tinged with Marxian attitude, the book provides a very clear and intellectual analysis of the novels of Scott, Fennimore Cooper, and Scott's European followers: Dumas, Manzoni, Hugo, Gogol and Chekov.)

Lytton, Sir Bulwer. Harold: The Last of the Saxon Kings. London: George

Routledge and Sons Ltd., 3rd ed., n.d.

(Lytton, in the introduction to the novel and to his other two novels, Rienzi and The Last of the Barons, explains how he strives to maintain the historical truth in his historical novels.)

Macaulay, Robie and Lanning, George. Technique in Fiction. New York:

Harper and Row Publishers, 1964.

MaCutchion, David. Indian Writing in English. Calcutta: Writers' Workshop, 1969.

Mackinlay, Kantor. "The Historical Novel," Three Views of the Novel: Lectures presented under the Auspices of the Gertrude Clark Whittall Poetry and Literature Fund. Washington: The Library of Congress, 1957.

(Kantor insists on accuracy of facts in a historical novel and opines that a historical novelist, like the technical director of a Hollywood film, must be the historical expert knowing everything about the time he has chosen.)

Mahajan, V.D. British Rule in India and After, 6th ed. N. Delhi: S. Chand ~~and Co., 1964~~ and Co., 1964.

Saintsbury, George. A History of Nineteenth Century Literature: 1780-1895. London: Macmillan and Co., 1896.

(In Ch. III 'The New Fiction', Saintsbury studies the Waverley novels and shows how Scott practically created the historical novel and elaborated it to such an extent that no really important addition to his scheme has been made since. Scott's gift as a historical novelist was the one of 'communicating life to the persons, the story and the dialogue' of the time.)
