ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

This study owes its completion to a large number of people consisting of teachers, colleagues and friends. The Centre for the Study of Social Systems, Jawaharlal Nehru University, provided the necessary intellectual and material support. Prof. T.K.Oommen, my Supervisor, helped me to develop the arguments and lines of reasoning tentatively formulated by me. But for his constant probing and prodding this study would not have been possible.

In the initial stages of the work, I received valuable guidance from Prof. Partha Nath Mukherjee, now at the Indian Statistical Institute, Calcutta. Prof. K.L. Sharma, as Supervisor of my M.Phil dissertation, helped me to concertize the problem of research. Prof. Y.B. Damle of Poona University, by initiating me into the field of Sociology, enkindled in me the desire to pursue this interesting subject as a life-time persuit. To all these my teachers I am greatly indebted.

I also benefited from discussions with a number of my colleagues, especially Mr. N.V. Varghese. Special thanks are due to my wife Cecily and son Jaimon Joseph for putting up with a host of inconveniences during the course of my research. Cecily, and my friend James Veliath helped me in correcting the type-script.
I should also acknowledge with deep gratitude, the speed and care with which Molly, my sister typed out the manuscript.

The offices of Thozhilali, Girideepam and other periodicals and newspapers helped me have access to their back numbers. Last, but not the least, I should thank the people of Sultan's Battery and Kottiyoor for having extended me unstinted cooperation during the course of my research. They were a source of insight and a wealth of information.
