I am deeply indebted to Professor Moenisa Raza, formerly Chairman, Centre for the Study of Regional Development, Jawaharlal Nehru University, now Director, National Institute of Educational Planning and Administration, for guiding me at various stages of this work and for his constant help in bringing this work to the present standard.

2. It may be pointed out that I continued to pursue this work during the period of my fellowship at the Centre of Development Studies, University of East Anglia, (England) in 1979 under the Colombo Plan. In this context, I would like to thank the authorities of the Planning Commission for sponsoring me for this fellowship. I would like to thank Professor I. Livingstone, Dr. D.C.R. Bolshaw and Dr. Bill Kinsey for many useful discussions on the subject. I would also like to thank the Director, Computer Centre, University of East Anglia, for providing excellent facilities for the analysis of data.

3. Professor G.S. Bhalla, Chairman, Centre for the Study of Regional Development, has all along been kind enough to spare his valuable time out of his extremely busy schedule for going through the several drafts of this dissertation and for helping me in getting out of the many tricky textual and statistical shortcomings. My heartiest thanks and gratitude to him for this favour.
4. Further, it may be clarified that the views expressed in this work are personal and do not in any way reflect the views of the Government of India, of which I am an official.
