ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

First and foremost, I would like to express my sincere gratitude to the people back there in Jharkhand, in general, and West Singhbhum, particularly, who not only accepted me with johar (welcome) but also extended warm support during the eight months which I spent between them. Without their kind co-operation, this study could not have been possible. I would then like to thank my PhD supervisor Prof. Supriya RoyChowdhury who has been instrumental in not only guiding me through this journey but also taught me about research, in the process. Without her critical enquiries it would not have been possible to do any amount of justice with my work. I was also fortunate to have Prof. Asoka Kumar Sen as my field mentor, a designation which I have chosen for him. His vast knowledge of adivasi history and society helped me to test my own observations by juxtaposing with his views.

My doctoral committee members Dr. G K Karanth, Dr. Sudha Sitharaman and Dr. Anil Kumar were equally generous in bearing with my amateurish thoughts and ideas. Each contributed in their own unique way. Dr. Karanth, extensively drawn into qualitative research, helped to capture even those dimensions which would have easily escaped my attention. Similarly, Dr. Sitharaman with her brilliant insights provided the edge to dwell deep into the subject. Dr. Anil Kumar kept me on track by consistently highlighting the threat of being carried away by ideology. Invaluable contributions also came from my panelists Dr. Rajasekhar, Dr. Inbanathan and Dr. Sobin George who, at different stages of my work, gave important suggestions and comments regarding methodology, field evidences and so on. Dr. Sivanna and Dr. Elumalai Kannan helped me with readings while Dr. R S Deshpande, with brief presence, brought his vintage wisdom to the work. Lastly, I would like to thanks Prof. K S James (Acting Director), Prof. Manohar Yadav (Registrar) and Prof. Madheswaran for facilitating the dissertation work during the final days.

I would also like to thank my friends at ISEC who, through their argumentative skills, helped me to hone my own. Seniors like Srikant, Nitin, Khalid, Manojit, Amrita, Shyam, Sandhya, Angan, Amit, Abhishekk, and many others discussed and passed several useful readings. Astonishingly, even hot discussions ended up into source of critical self-reflection. My batch mates Vinay, Lavanya, Mini, Aparimita, Krishanu, Rajesh, Sumedha, Pradeep and Bhavana were instrumental in making the initial days at the campus a fun. Juniors like Ananthramu, Ramanjini, Aashish, Subhash, Shikha, Pooja, Lakshmi and many others also made the life easier. However, association with Neil was exceptionally enriching as we discussed endless issues.

Many thanks to the ISEC academic section staff, especially K S Narayana, Mr. Mohan and Ms. Vimala who were always there to help and make the things easier. Leela ma’am, Mr. B B Chand, Rajanna, Kalyanappa, Srinivasa and other library staff were also of immense help. Vinod from the computer centre went out the way to help on several occasions. Friends outside campus like Gangadhar and Jagdish deserve special mention for their humour and help in awkward situations. Subsequently, thanks are due to Devra Tubid, Ramesh Jerai, Gautam Minj, Tarun, Moran Tomsoy, Xavier Dias, Ambika Das, Mukesh Birua, Mangal Singh Bobonga, Gurucharan Nayak and many others back there in West Singhbhum who facilitated my field trips.

Finally, I must convey my sincere thanks to my family members who bear with me all these years without complaining much about my absence from important family get-together on several occasions. The little ones back home were the one who effortlessly brought charm and joy through their innocence and playfulness. Special thanks for my mother and father who extended all the support which parents possibly can. I wish, everyone was blessed with such kind of parents.

Thanks one and all!

Sujit Kumar
