ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

Every piece of work owes a great deal to a number of persons, directly or indirectly. When I thought of expressing any debt to those who helped me in completing my dissertation, I found myself unable to recall all the names and to put them in black and white. I extended my apologies to them whose contribution I could not record.

Most important contribution to my entry into the discipline of Sociology was made by my supervisor Professor Yogendra Singh. His reputation as a scholar has long been established, which influenced me a great deal in taking a decision in making a career out of Sociology in general and entrepreneurship in particular. More important, however, he had been my strength as my supervisor and a person - simple, warm and concerned. I do not find words to express my feelings towards him.

I had the occasion to see three Chairmen during my period of study in this University: Prof. T.K. Oommen, Prof. K.L. Sharma and Prof. R.K. Jain; all have shown great concern and helped liberally to tide over my problems. As my teacher Prof. Oommen inspired me to be disciplined. Prof. Sharma taught me the value of hard work and Prof. Jain taught me how to be courteous to others. I express my deep sense of gratitude towards them.
I was also helped greatly by Prof. Chaddha of the C.S.R.D. and Mr. Muralidhar, who saw me through the taxing task of computerisation within a short period of time, despite enormous demands on them from other students and colleagues. I express my thanks to them for their support and cooperation.

I also express my thanks to the staff of J.N.U. Library, Nehru Memorial Library, Central Secretariat Library, Deen Dyal Library, Sapru House Library, IIM Library, Ahmedabad, and EDII Library Gandhinagar, Kanpur University Library, the officials of Directorate of Industries, U.P. Kanpur, U.P. Industrial Consultants Kanpur, District Industry Centre and U.P. Brass ware Corporation, Brass Artsware Exporters and Manufacturers Association Moradabad, All India Handicraft Board, Delhi, and Registrar General, Census of India, for their ungrudging cooperation.

To all the respondents, entrepreneurs, caste, religious and political leaders of Moradabad town, whose ideas I tried to systematise in my dissertation, I express my sincere thanks to all of them. Mr. Furqan Ahmed who acquainted me with Moradabad city and the people and helped me in data collection, I owe a great deal. I also express my sincere regards to Dr. Misra of the Department of Sociology, Hindu College, Moradabad who was my guide in the field. Special thanks also due to Dr. Gupta, Principal, Hindu college, Moradabad, who provided me long accommodation during my field visits.

While working in EDII during the last two years, Dr. V.G. Patel, the Director always pestered me to complete my thesis and provided leave as and when I needed. Dr. A.N. Oza became my benefactor and my guide in Ahmedabad who was more worried about the completion of my thesis than I was. Mr H.C. Raval of EDII always encouraged me to write my thesis and provided occasion to revisit my field with a new technique of Interview.

Two of my colleagues form EDII, Gandhinagar, Mr Bharat N. Bhatt and Dinesh N. Awasthi, who provided me emotional sustenance during my lonely life in Ahmedabad and who literally coerced me to complete my thesis. I do not know whether they deserve thanks? Ms Amita Shah needs to be mentioned for providing me food when in Ahmedabad and listening patiently to my thoughts related to the thesis and offering scholarly suggestions which crystalised my frame of analysis.

Over and above, on sustaining me and accomplishing a task of writing a dissertation just within a period of two months, is my friend Mr. Anil Singh, who spent sleepless nights in sitting on the micro-processor, correcting all types of errors and spent days in cooking food for me, cleaning my house and similar other household chores. If there were a provision in thesis, I would have gladly accepted him as co-author of the study.

I feel guilty towards my wife and children whom I neglected due to my pursuit for a Carrier and finishing my thesis. My wife, Saira Tasneem ungrudgingly brought up Basha and Misha, all alone, living away from her husband for more than two years. Both the children felt so insecure, that as and when I visited them, they followed me like my own shadow.

I express my sincere regrds to my uncle Mr. A. Hasib from Bombay, who offen taught me how to write thesis and where to stop. He would write, "Research is a continuous process. It should stop at some point, especially, if it a time-bound assignment". I always looked up to him as my model, but rarely reached even near the aura that he is surrounded by.

Dr. Brahm Prakash of NIEPA, Delhi had been, for last six years, my adviser on the issues ranging from 'precision in thinking and analysis to leading a calculated, planned and controlled life'. The visions of Prof. Moonis Raza that I had occasions to watch closely, always inspired me to shape my thinking pattern the way he does: at once liberal and unorthodox.

In the end I express my sincere thanks to Mr. Sanjay Kumar Jain of the Typo-graphic Centre who painstakingly put my draft through the micro-processor at a short notice. My sincere thanks are also due to Mr. P.N. Tyagi, who prepared cartographic charts of my thesis as a gesture of friendship. Mr. H. Bose, the owner of the Electra Photo Studio deserves complements who photocopied about 2000 pages carefully and neatly in just one night. However, for all the errors and mistakes, that might have cropped in inadvertently, the author alone is responsible.
