ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I am greatly indebted to Dr. S.V. Subramanian, Director, International Institute of Tamil Studies whose help for me is many-sided. His never-failing warmth and understanding had been a source of strength that had sustained and nourished me throughout the period of research. Not only did he register me for research in the Institute, but also gave me opportunity after opportunity to grow by making me contribute articles to the journals and participate in scholarly seminars. The three years of research in the Institute are by far the most fruitful period. His stimulation, advice and encouragement are largely responsible for this work of mine.

My obligation to Dr. V. Sachidanandan, Co-ordinator, Department of English and Comparative Literature, Madurai-Kamaraj University is no less greater. It is that pioneer-comparatist in this part of the world who initiated me into the discipline of Comparative Literature. It is his inspiring lectures during the period of my M.Phil Course under him and the highly stimulating personal discussions thereafter that have shaped me into a student of Comparative Literature.
But for his understanding and willingness to share his scholarship and experience, this work would have been poorer.

I must express my profound gratitude to Dr. Annie Mrithulakumari Thomas, my guide, for her extensive and ungrudging help, without which I would have found it difficult to complete this work.

I would remain indebted to Dr. A.A. Manavalan who went through the first draft of this dissertation and made valuable comments and suggestions. It is he who kept my spirits alive when I had to face hostile criticism of my comparing the author of Lady Chatterley's Lover with so 'cultured and edifying' a literature as the Akam poetry. Dr. K. Chellappan, in the midst of his preoccupations, had been kind enough to spend hours with me and clarify my doubts in the final stages of my writing. I express my hearty thanks to him. I am thankful to Dr. T. Prabakar who agreed to be my co-supervisor, and who made himself available to me whenever I need his help and guidance.

It is with a profound sense of gratitude that I wish to record my indebtedness to many other scholars who have helped me in this work at one stage or the other.
Dr. T.V. Veerasamy, Dr. Marutanayagam, Dr. A.N. Perumal and many others. I owe a deep debt of gratitude to my friends of a life-time Thiru J.D. Jayasekaran and Thiru K. Mohan Ram who sat with me for days together, read the first draft and came out with many fruitful suggestions, and to my cousin M. Mathialagan who assiduously checked the text of each quotation in this dissertation and compared it with the original. My special thanks are due to Mrs. Sivagamasundari and Mrs. Parvathi, the librarians of the International Institute of Tamil Studies, for their kindness and understanding with which they lent me books most generously.

My deepest gratitude goes to my wife Mrs. Thenmozhi, whose help words cannot describe. How prophetic Lawrence is when he says: "It is hopeless for me to try to do anything without I have a woman at the back of me!"
