ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

Since long I had the feeling that folklore or folk literature is the key to the understanding of social history and culture of any ethnic group. After I had reached China in 1986, Prof. Wu Xiaoling of the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences helped me wholeheartedly in finding me the most suitable place for studying Chinese folk literature: Beijing Normal University (founded in 1902). I am thankful to Prof. Wu for putting me in contact with Prof. Zhong Jingwen, a well-known theorist in Chinese folk literature.

I was fortunate enough to be in interaction with a broad section of the Chinese people. While visiting different places in China, people from different walks of life extended valuable suggestions in my effort to acquire material on Chinese folk literature.

I was greatly benefitted by the lectures delivered by Prof. Tao Lifan, Prof. Zhong Jingwen, Prof. Zhang Zichen and others at the Second All-China Folklore Seminar held at Mentougou--a picturesque place near Beijing. I am thankful to Prof. Zhong for inviting me to the seminar, and also for providing me with books on various aspects of folk literature.

I got much inspiration from Prof. Allan Dundes, an anthropologist and folklorist at the University of California, Berkeley. I met him in 1990 during one of his lectures at the Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, Beijing. I also drew inspiration from Prof. Boris Riftin of the Academy of Sciences of the USSR when he delivered a lecture at Beijing Normal University in 1987.

I remain immeasurably grateful to Dr. Dawa Norbu for his critical perusal of my chapters. I have been greatly benefitted by his explanatory comments, which I have utilised in my thesis. His cooperative attitude throughout the course of this study was a great source of inspiration and encouragement. I must also thank him for providing me with many useful books, journals and reprints regarding Tibetan folk literature. It was truly my pleasure to have worked with him. With his sagacity, humour and humility he has proved himself to be a very good colleague, friend and supervisor of mine.

I am thankful to Mr. Zu Renzhi, a visiting professor at J.N.U., for his brief assistance in explaining to me certain paragraphs from some Chinese classical texts.

My sincere thanks are due to Mr. Lotsawa Tenzing Dorjee, Ms. Tsering Norzom and Ms. Pema Khangsar of the Library of Tibetan Works and Archives, Dharamsala, for helping me with as much information as possible within their official limitations. I also thank Mr. V.K. Agarwal of the J.N.U. Library for cordially helping me to find out certain books without much difficulty.

Viewing the wide spectrum of folk literature from a distance of several centuries indeed needs painstaking effort. I owe a deep sense of gratitude to my father, Late Dr. V.P. Mukherji (1930-1984), for imbibing in me patience and a sense of precision. His wide range of knowledge, some of which I could inherit, has come to my assistance in writing my thesis.

Words fail to convey my feelings to my wife, Sriparna, without whose active cooperation I could not have completed writing my thesis. One of the main sources of my inspiration was my little daughter, Sridarshana, who gave me a fresh breath of life and invigorated my spirit in many ways. The moral support across a distance of several thousand miles, that I got from my mother and brother, was instrumental in the completion of this work. Lastly, I thank Mrs. T. Kameswari and Mr. K. Sri Raghu for the word-processing job.

The errors of substance and judgement are my sole responsibility.
