CONTENTS

Introduction

Chapter 1

Amar Chitra Katha: The Product and the ‘Brand’ ... 34

- Two Products: two audience(s)? ........................................................ 63
- The Material Signifier ........................................................................ 72

Chapter 2

The visual form of ACK ................................................................. 91

- Reading Harsha .............................................................................. 96
- ACK and the comic book medium: Uses of Realism ..................... 114
- Folktales and Fables: Caricature as style ........................................ 126
- Two experiments: ACK’s own (trans-) ‘historical’ fiction .............. 135
- The ‘visual language’ of advertisements ........................................ 140
- Comics in India ................................................................................ 156
- Signification in comics .................................................................... 162
- The visual code/s of ACK ............................................................... 165
- Representing the ‘other’ .................................................................. 169
- Two stereotypes: Muslims and Women .......................................... 173
- Historicizing ACK visuals .............................................................. 180
- Placing ACK in the history of popular ‘Indian’ art: History I ........ 183
- History II: immediate precursors .................................................. 189
Chapter 3
The State of Children’s Literature...................... 218

- The riddle called ‘Children’s Literature’: adult-child binary ..........220
- ‘The Storyteller’: Benjamin and after .............................................228
- Child/reader: constituting a discursive category .........................233
- ‘Child’ in official documents ......................................................235
- The Enlightenment idea of ‘education’: The ‘social’ as discursive formation and the paradox of ‘growth’ ...............241
- ‘Children’ in ACK: A few examples ............................................245
- The ‘playful’ child of Romanticism .............................................251
- A ‘modern’ ideology of childhood in the Indian postcolony ..........255
- A new investment in ‘Indian’ childhood ....................................259
- ‘Value’ education: a look at Education Commission Reports .......262
- ‘Indian’ English ...........................................................................275

Chapter 4
Contextualizing the contemporary: ACK now ...... 279

- ‘New’ media boom: ‘new’ public sphere? ....................................280
- ‘Fall’ of ACK: Framing the context ...............................................284
- The changing culture of childhood in popular Hindi films ..........298
- Indian ‘nation’ and its children .....................................................309
Representing childhood now: Taare Zameen Par .........................312

That melee called ‘globalization’..........................................................320

‘Secualism’ as policy: a debated issue ..............................................321

Nation as imaginary: old and new models ......................................326

Visual (and) print cultures: old and new ....................................331

Conclusion ............................................................................ 336

Theorizing ‘childhood’ ........................................................................339

Discourse of ‘childhood’ in India ....................................................341

Discourse of ‘child’/‘childhood’ in the 19th century:
a look at Bengali journalistic writings ...........................................347

‘Discipline, punish and educate’: inaugurating
a modern regime of ‘childhood’ .....................................................353

Lessons closer in time ..................................................................358

Summing up: whither ACK? ..........................................................366

Bibliography ............................................................................ 370