Acknowledgments

Acknowledgements, apart from footnotes are the only defined spaces in my thesis to express my indebtedness to those people who mould my consciousness. I would like to express my indebtedness to my supervisor, Prof. Krishnendu Ghosh Dastidar. As a post graduate student, his work and lectures influenced my fascination for game theory. Without his persistent and gentle pressure and unwavering support over the years, this work would not have been possible. Prof. Amit Bhaduri's writings introduced me to the world of economics as an undergraduate in college. His work on agrarian backwardness influenced me to study the political economy of backwardness in agrarian systems. A public hearing organized by agricultural workers in Delhi, 2006 gave me an opportunity to discuss my thesis with him. The interactions that followed gave me the opportunity to evolve my understanding and clarify various aspects of my thesis. In addition, he allowed me to use insights from an unpublished work. I wish to acknowledge my intellectual debts to Prof. Bhaduri.

I have been lucky to have parents whose own scientific involvement with agriculture and regular field visits (my Plant Physiologist mother and my father, Professor of Agricultural Sciences) shaped my fascination for agrarian systems. I wish to acknowledge my deepest intellectual debt to my father, whose vast experience of agrarian systems is an archive, that I could turn to at any time.

Prof. Utsa Patnaik’s work and lectures helped shape my understanding of agrarian systems. I am grateful to her for clarifying certain key concepts which strengthened my own work. It was in the summer of 2005, that the campaign for a full fledged Employment Guarantee Act happened in the form of a bus yatra across nine states for 50 days. The itenary included some of the most backward districts across nine states. My understanding of backwardness wouldn’t be what it is without those days on the bus. Traveling in the bus with Jean, influenced my lens of backwardness and modes of doing research. Without Jean Dreze, my study of backwardness could have become a comfortable journey in the security of urban structures. I would like to acknowledge his contribution to the shaping of this work.

Anand Chakravarti’s seminal work on caste and agrarian class structure, Tom Brass’ work on unfree labour, Jan Breman’s work on rural labour, Uma Chakravarti’s theory of Brahminical patriarchy provided a fascinating theoretical journey – I acknowledge my debts to all of them. Also, I would like to thank Dr. Shubhendu Dasgupta, Prabhu and Rohan for the discussions I have had with them which have influenced my thesis.

Doing field work with Neha and sharing similar concerns have helped evolve my understanding of agrarian change. Her critical insights and companionship have helped shape my work and has kept me going, through these years. There are numerous friends and comrades in JNU with whom I share similar concerns and whose unwavering support have contributed to making my days in JNU a learning experience - Anil, Bodhi, Jitendra, Sumit, Anja, Milind, Jomo, Prachin, Nabarun, Srimi, Saroj, Hari, Ashley, Alia. I also wish to express my gratitude to Kamal, Anuradha, Susan Visvanathan, Avijit Pathak for their support, especially when times were difficult.

My field visits in Jharkhand, Chattisgarh and Madhya Pradesh and the research outcome wouldn't be what it is without Balram, Ilina, Jawahar, Gangabhai, Binayak, Kavita Srivastava, Devlal and Indramani. I also wish to thank Jayati Ghosh, Abhijit Sen, Himanshu and the 70 students in the NREGA survey team for their support. My case study in Palamau would have been incomplete had it not been for Lalit. Lalit was a young engineer who had devoted his life to change the contours of backwardness in one of the most backward districts of this country. He was murdered. Words fail me even today but his absence is sorely missed.

Sunayana, Koyal, Praveen, Nishant, Ashish, Uma, Sandeep, Meera, Sucheta, Sumati, Anandi, Aparajay, Neha Hui, Vismay, Taposhik, Shakti, Shourik, Sagar and many others have been instrumental in making my last year/s in JNU worthwhile.

The workers' struggle in JNU made me unlearn many things, fortunately. Their lives and struggle continue to be a source of inspiration.
