Acknowledgments

I should record my sincere gratitude to many people who have extended so much help and support in completing this work. The first and the foremost is my supervisor, Professor Arun Kumar, whose critical insights and constructive suggestions have helped me develop new perspectives and understanding of the subject of the study. I have benefited enormously from my discussions with him and the comments he made on the draft thesis, which he carefully and meticulously read several times. He has not only been my research supervisor but also a father-figure who has showed me lots of care and affection during the entire period of my stay in JNU. He understood my difficulties and extended all sorts of help and support, for which I remain indebted throughout my life. I do not have sufficient words to express my sincere gratitude to him and his family members.

My special thanks are due to Dr. P. Sabadevan of the School of International Studies for his encouragement and moral support. Dr. Sanmen Chattopadhyay of the Zahir Hussain Centre for Educational Studies deserves my sincere thanks for his total support and friendship. I must also thank Mr. Chandrakant and his wife for their care and affection. They have always been my family’s local guardians in Delhi.

Many friends in JNU have extended varied help at the last stage of my thesis work. In this regard, my special thanks goes to Sunil who was always available whenever I wanted help. Also, I am indebted to Rajamohan, Mayil, Senthil, Rajeswari, Dr. Pari, Dr. Sakhivel and Dharma, who have been great source of support.

The last, but not the least, I must thank my wife Meena and son Amruth for their moral support and patience while I was engaged in this work.
