This study of the educational policy of the Government of India during the British period is an attempt to present a background to the development of modern Indian education. It may be noted that all thinking minds in India today are constantly pondering over the question of evolving a national educational policy and the present study will be of much interest in this context.

I am grateful to Prof. V. Narayana Pillai, former Acting Vice-Chancellor of the Kerala University who helped me in selecting this topic for research in 1963. He has been a source of inspiration since then. My personal thanks are due to Prof. P.K. Karunakara Menon, Head of the Department of History, Kerala University, my associate supervising teacher, who has gone through my work patiently and offered a number of valuable suggestions. I would also like to express my sincere thanks to Dr. Desikachar, Assistant Director of National Archives, New Delhi, who was of much help to me during my stay in Delhi. But for his help I would not have had access to some of the rare materials available on the subject of my research. I also thank the librarians of National Archives, (New Delhi), University Library, Trivandrum, Gandhi Samarak Senkalaya, Madurai, University Library, Madurai and the Public Library, Tri-
