Chapter V

The Contribution of International Court of Justice (I.C.J) to the development of the Law of Maritime Delimitation:

5.1 Origin of the Theory of Natural Prolongation in the 1969 North Sea Continental Shelf cases 220
5.2 Court's clarification about the meaning of delimitation 221
5.3 Meaning of Maritime Delimitation under Natural Prolongation theory 222
5.4 The Inexorable Decline of the Natural Prolongation Principle 223
5.5 Development of the new concept of Maritime Delimitation 232
5.6 Title Governs Delimitation 233
5.7 Delimitation and the Basis of Title 235
5.8 The Coastal Front: Maritime Rights 236
5.9 Principle of Adjacency: Maritime Rights 238
5.10 Exercise of Title and Delimitation 239
Distance Criteria and Maritime Delimitation 239
5.11 The Spatial Character of Delimitation 240
5.12 The principle of non-encroachment 242
5.13 Theory of Radial Projection 245
5.14 Theory of Omni-directional Delimitation 248
5.15 Conclusion 252

(i) Coastal Length and Delimitation, The So-Called Principle of Proportionality 254
(ii) Equidistance, a Method Inherent in the Concept of Delimitation 255

(iii) Libya / Malta - A Transitional Judgment 257
(iv) Equidistance not an Obligatory Method 257

APPRAISAL, CONCLUSIONS AND SUGGESTIONS

6.1. Appraisal of the Research Study 259

6.2. Conclusions of the Research 267

6.2.1. Summarising the Conclusions of the Study 267

6.2.1.(i) Delimitation is to be made to achieve Equitable Solution 267

6.2.1.(ii) The Equidistance or Median-Line Approach Can be Used as an Aid to Analysis, but It Is Not to be Used as a Binding or Mandatory Principle 268

6.2.1.(iii) The Proportionality of Coasts Must be Examined to Determine if a Maritime Boundary Delimitation is "Equitable." 268

6.2.1.(iv) Geographical considerations will govern maritime boundary delimitations and non-geographic considerations will only rarely have any relevance 269

6.2.1.(v) "Natural prolongation" is no longer a prominent factor in maritime delimitations 270

6.2.1.(vi) The Principle of Non-Encroachment 270

6.2.1.(vii) The Principle of Maximum Reach 271

6.2.1.(viii) Each Competing Country is Allocated Some Maritime Area 272
6.2.1.(ix) Islands Have a Limited Role in Resolving Maritime Boundary Disputes.

6.2.1.(x) The Vital Security Interests of each Nation must be Protected
