ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The completion of this dissertation is the result of the co-operation extended to me by a number of persons.

Prof. Dr. S.D. Joshi, Head of the Department, Department of Sanskrit, was kind enough to make available to me a Junior Research Fellowship and enabled me to undertake my research project. Further he extended to me, from time to time all necessary help and guidance through valuable suggestions. I take this opportunity to express my gratitude to him.

Prof. Dr. K.P. Jog, who was my teacher of Vedic studies at the M.A. level, kindly consented to offer his guidance for my Ph.D. work also. I received from him every possible guidance in all kinds of difficulties. I do not know how I could thank him adequately.

I shall have failed in my duty if I did not mention with gratitude that Prof. R.N. Bandekar spared some moments, even in his extremely busy schedule and discussed with me the problems I faced and encouraged me with his characteristic kindly help.

Further, I had the good fortune to get in the nick of time solutions for some of the perplexities which I faced.
in my work from Pandit Shrinivasa Shastri, who is a great authority in many branches of Sanskrit studies, Shri Venugopalan, who introduced me to the Grantha script and further helped me in reading microfilms in Grantha Script and Dr. H. G. Ramade who gave me his assistance in determining the meanings of certain obscure passages. All these colleagues of my Guiding Teacher at the Deccan College, helped me in more than one way. I must not fail to express sense of deep gratitude to all of these.

The Libraries of the following well-known institutions kindly permitted me to refer to and to utilize the rare manuscripts in their possession:

2. The Adyar Library, Adyar, Madras.
3. Oriental Research Institute, Mysore.
4. Oriental Research Institute, Baroda.
6. Nāgarī Pracārini Sabha, Varanasi
7. Deccan College Post Graduate and Research Institute, Library, Poona.
8. Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute, Poona.
I am deeply indebted to the authorities of these institutions. Yet among them Prof. Veezinathan of the University of Madras must deserve a special mention. It was thanks to him that I could get a xerox-copy of the Drṣṭa-yāṇa-Grhya-Pariśiṣṭa within a remarkably short time after I requested him for it, during the very last days of my work on this dissertation.

Thanks are also due to Mr. J. V. Sudhakar who has helped me to transliterate the Telugu work into the Devanāgarī, and to Dr. S. Wakankar, who has made available to me a few references from the Manuscript that is available at C.R.I. Baroda and to Mr. J. Satyananda, who made every effort to secure for me the manuscript of the Gauṭāmī-Paddhati from the Nāgarī-Pracārini-Sabhā of Vārānasī.

I express my thanks to my friends Dr. Neelima Mone, Dr. Shoun Hino, Mrs. Vidya Sharma, Mrs. Nanda Murthy, Mr. Prakash Joshi and Mrs. Lalita Deodhar, whose help was conducive to the completion of this work. I have to offer all the best of thanks to Mr. V. V. Sahasrabuddhe for efficiently typing out my rather complicated dissertation in good time.

I must not forget the perpetual inspiration and full cooperation extended to me by all the members of my family, but particularly by my husband and my daughter during the days of completion of this dissertation. I should prefer to remain in their debt perpetually.

Poona.
