ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

Now that this work is complete, I would like to express my thanks to the many people who provided me with their valuable assistance. There are too many to mention all here by name. Some have granted me interviews, others through their replies to my enquiries both written and verbal, provided me with valuable information and vital insights. The fact that a substantial part of the information used in the research was based on interviews and questionnaires make it all too obvious that, without their help, this work could not have been successfully completed.

I am greatly indebted to ex-Premier Muhsin al-Ayni who encouraged me to embark on this project when the idea was first put to him about four years ago. Despite his many official duties and other commitments, he gave me the privilege of interviewing him more than once. His first-hand information on the evolution of the country's post-revolutionary politics and his intellectual command of the subject enabled me to form a clear picture of the main strands of YAR foreign policy of the period.

My deep appreciation is due to the administrators of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs who helped me in many ways to pursue my post-graduate studies, whilst enjoying the privilege of serving in my country's embassy in London. My friends, both inside and outside the Ministry gave me their moral support and encouragement, for which I remain grateful.
I am particularly grateful to the first two heads of the Yemen Arab Republic - Abdallah al-Sallal and Kadi Abd al-Rahman al-Iryani. Their replies to questionnaires have not only enriched this work but also conveyed their interest in it, thus enhancing my resolution to continue my studies despite frequent frustrations.

Finally, my thanks go to Professor Fred Halliday, who supervised this research. His expertise, patience, and grasp of Middle East politics in general and Yemeni affairs in particular contributed significantly to the completion of this work.

My hope is that this study is worthy of the considerable interest expressed by the above-mentioned persons and the support they gave me.

I should add that the views expressed in this thesis do not represent either the official views of the then YAR Ministry of Foreign Affairs or the personal views of the persons who contributed to this work. The study is my personal undertaking and I remain solely responsible for the facts and interpretations included in it.
