ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

Even though this work is mainly the result of my own effort, many other persons and organisations have made immense contributions for its accomplishment, for which I am grateful. First and foremost, I am thankful for the support and encouragement I received from my employer, the Kenya Industrial Research and Development Institute (KIRDI). I especially thank Dr.-Ing. H. L. Kaane, the Director KIRDI, for his guidance and advice.

I am specially indebted to my supervisor, Prof. C. P. Chandrasekhar, for his guidance, advice and understanding. His vast knowledge and experience in the subject not only gave me inspiration and direction, but also immensely contributed to my understanding of the subject matter and the theories relevant to the study. The keen interest Prof. Chandrasekhar always showed in my work progress and his thought provoking comments during discussions were outstanding. Without his dedication and sacrifice, this work could not have attained its present form.

I am indebted to the Kenyan and Indian Governments for awarding me the Indo-Kenya Cultural Exchange Programme scholarship. I also acknowledge the help received from the Indian Council for Cultural Relations (ICCR) which administered the scholarship on behalf of the two governments.

I extend my heartfelt gratitude to the African Economic Research Consortium (AERC) for awarding me a Research Grant that financed the field study and the preparation of this thesis. I am profoundly thankful to Dr. Benno J. Ndulu, the Executive Director AERC and Prof. William Lyakurwa, Training Co-ordinator, AERC, for their co-operation in facilitating the disbursement of the Research Grant promptly and in taking a keen interest in the progress of the study.

My gratitude also goes to those colleagues and friends who assisted me in one way or the other during the entire period of the study. In particular, I register my appreciation and thanks to Dr. Mohammed Mwaremde and Mr. Kenneth Ombongi, a former colleague at JNU, whose comments on the initial proposal enabled me to develop a clear focus for the study. I also owe my Research Assistants Matano Ndaro, Henry Misigo, Evans Busaka and Ms. Caudencia Otipa special thanks and gratitude for their support and assistance in conducting the field survey. Others who deserve mention are Mr. Muruli Kalummal, a colleague at CESP and all my Kenyan colleagues, particularly Messrs. M. C. Z Moturi, Paul Chepkuto, Jamin Masinde and Benson Agaya, who were with me at JNU, for their support and every day company.

Last but not the least, I extend my most heartfelt gratitude to my wife Mealii and daughters Mwanasiti, Zuhura and Sikizano for their love, understanding and patience. Though my being away denied them of my affection and attention, they have always given me the much needed inspiration and encouragement.
