

Acknowledgements

It is with great pleasure that I am finally able to thank some of the persons who have contributed in so many ways to the completion of this thesis.

First, I must thank my family, especially my parents, who made it easier by believing in me all these years.

I am immensely indebted to my supervisor Dr. (Mrs.) Suman Gupta. She has initiated and sustained my research interest in linguistic philosophy, especially in Ludwig Wittgenstein’s work. She has shown continuous interest not only in my research work but also in my personal well-being. She has been readily available and easily accessible for discussion and providing valuable suggestions over these years, which had sharpened my understanding of the topic. Only her constant encouragement has made me to complete my thesis that too on one of the toughest philosophers.

I am grateful to Dr. R. P. Singh in being a source of encouragement in various ways. From selecting the topic to bringing the thesis in its final shape, he was of immense help in all the stages. Discussions with him were valuable in improving the thesis.

A number of people have helped me to work out my thoughts in various parts of the thesis. I am grateful in particular to Manjuri, who has always been a continuous source of help and motivation. Her loving concern throughout these years helped me to sustain the pressure in the long and tedious process of readying this thesis.
I would like to express my deep thankfulness to Pradosh, Pari, and Raj for turning my manuscript into a legible text. Without their contribution it would have been really difficult to reach to the final stage.

Naseer, Anand, Khalid, Nilesh and Mithilesh must be singled out for special thanks for credulously providing their helping hand, whenever I needed it.

I thank Ishvar, Sunitha, Sudipta, Jayanti, Sudershan, Bansidhar, Subba Rao and Sangitha for their friendly co-operation.

Finally I cannot forget Meenal, Madhavi, Banarjee, Southam, Som & Souman, Sartaz, Pramod, Kasim, Shreedhar, and Godsen for their friendly concern.

Acknowledgement is due to I.C.P.R for providing monetary support for these years and giving the opportunity to have greater interaction with the experts in the area through seminars and meets. I am, in particular thankful to Dr. Mercy Helen for her co-operative attitude whenever needed it.

Last not the least, I express my gratitude to my Jeeja Ji and Didi and little Golu who has been the constant source of inspiration and help for me to complete this work.

In spite of such assistance, errors will no doubt be found in my work, and for these I claim sole responsibility
