ACKNOWLEDGEMENT

I wish to place on record my sincere thanks to

My supervisor, Dr. V. Syamala, Professor, Institute of English, for the productive discussions, the perceptive reviews and patient over-looking of my omissions and commissions, which saw me through this research work.

Dr. K. Radha, Professor and Head, Institute of English, for allowing me to carry out this research.

Dr. Maya Dutt, Reader, Institute of English, for her constant support and encouragement throughout this research programme.

Dr. V. Sasikumar, Professor, CIEFL, Hyderabad, whose sensible suggestions helped me in overcoming the snags during the course of this study.

Professor David Nunan (University of Hong Kong), Professor Amy B-M. Tsui (University of Hong Kong), Professor Richard Allwright (University of Lancaster), and Dr. Constant Leung (King’s College London) for the positive responses and creative correspondence amidst their hectic schedules.

The Principal, the English teacher, the class teacher and the students of Std. XII J of the St. Mary’s Higher Secondary School, Thiruvananthapuram, for their genuine interest and wholehearted cooperation in this project.
The Principals, The English teachers and students at the higher secondary level in Medical College Higher Secondary School, the Christ Nagar Group of Schools, and the Loyola School, Thiruvananthapuram, for participating in this research work.

The libraries of the Institute of English, the British Council Library, Thiruvananthapuram, and CIEFL, Hyderabad, for the role they played in the conception, evolution and chiseling out of this thesis.

Sankaram Computers, Volks Computers, and Prathibha Printers, Thiruvananthapuram for the professional service rendered in the printing and binding of this work.
“Our ignorance of what actually happens inside classrooms is spectacular.”

(Stubbs, qtd. in van Lier, 1988: 78)