ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The number of people who have helped and encouraged me during my research period in CDS have been many. However, a few of them stand out for their deeper involvement and unconditional support. First and foremost, I am indebted to my guides, Dr. D. Narayana and Dr. P.R. Gopinathan Nair for their encouragement, valuable suggestions and guidance. It has been a learning experience to work with them. Dr. Narayana helped me to pursue my interest in the economic aspects of health care and provided the much-needed freedom to carry out the research at my stride and pace. He supported and encouraged me throughout the period, but cautioned me whenever I took a laid back attitude and whenever I exceeded the limits of research into passion. Dr. P.R.G helped me to understand the complicated scenario of Kerala's health care. In spite of time and health constraints, he took pain to read through each word of the thesis and edited it. Without his careful reading and editing, the thesis would not have been readable.

Words are inadequate to express my gratitude towards Dr. Mala Ramanathan and Dr. Uday Shankar Mishra to whom I am indebted for their academic help, moral support and constant encouragement without which I would not have gathered enough confidence to carry out the research. From clarifying the doubts in multivariate analysis to giving those valuable tips to do field work and helping in crucial moments, they were there when I needed them most, though I feel that I should have learned more from their expertise.

I am grateful to Dr. K.K Subrahmanian, Dr. P. Mohanan Pillai, Dr. John Kurien, Dr. P.K Panda, Dr. K.P. Kannan, Dr. K. Pushpangadan, Dr. K.J Joseph, Dr. Achin Chakraborty, Dr. V. Shanthakumar, Dr. N. Shantha, Dr. G.N. Rao, Dr. Indrani Chakraborty and other faculties of CDS for their valuable suggestions during the work-in-progress seminars and Vikas for his help in learning “access”. Dr. Subrahmanian’s affection, care and encouragement are something unparalleled. The brief discussions I had with Dr. Muraleedharan of IIT, Chennai, Dr. Cameron Donaldson and Dr. Sarla Sethi of University of Calgary, Canada and Dr. Hazel Johnson of the Open University, Milton Keynes (and her accompanying BBC-Open University, Milton Keynes team during the initial days of my research) were of great help in exchanging ideas. Thanks are also due to Dr. Indrani Gupta of IEG for providing me enough time to finish the final formalities of the thesis before retuning to IEG. I also thank Dr. Indira Rajaraman of NIPFP for her constant encouragement.

The emotional support and technical assistance I received from my friends are unrivalled. I do not have enough words to describe the help I got from George, Hari, Tina, Rakhe, Poornima, Binoy and Shabeer in the last phase of research. The hours they put in to see that the thesis print out came out well and in proper shape, vindicates their sincerity and friendship. Indeed, it will be belittling their contribution if I thank them formally for their unconditional support and help. George, as usual, was the benevolent friend who provided me with all necessary facilities, apart from formatting and doing the necessary works for final print out. I sincerely wish that his admirable, selfless services take him to places. Hari patiently checked the necessary attributes of the thesis. Hari provided the much-needed brotherly affection and protection. Along with George, Hari and Binoy, Tina and Rakhe assisted in going through the thesis again and correcting the mistakes. Apart from their academic help, they provided the much needed emotional support and understanding which were essential to keep my cool (though I lost it many times!) in the final stage of thesis. The singing sessions, the ‘theetti’ and ‘kathi’ sessions I had with all of them shall remain part of the beautiful memories about CDS. I thank Kiran for his encouragement, care and help during the last one year, and especially during the crucial days when I was preparing to go to IEG. His ability in thinking and arguing issues in a more practical and scientific way has forced me at times to think economics beyond the "ceteris paribus" assumptions. Ambili and Jayasree for their understanding and encouragement.

Many of my fellow research scholars and friends in CDS contributed to my learning process through the informal discussions and encouragement. I thank M.R. Anand for his encouragement in the initial years of research. The occasional discussion on the topic I had with Tara, Lekha, Pinaki, Shaheena, and Kurup were useful. I thank Lekha, Pinaki and Veeramany for those nice periods of academic and non-academic adventures at CDS and outside. I thank Sanjith, Dennis, Meena, Tara, Shaheena, Jameskuttu, Antonyto, Murugan, Kabeer, Parameswaran, Rajesh, Sunny, Deepita, Uma, Venkitesh, Azeez, Prabhakaran, D&B, Gopinath, Reetha, and Saji for their care and encouragement. Subbu, Renjan, Rathikant, Subrati, Balaji, Reji and Indu were there for the "deedi" whenever I needed their company. Special thanks to my friends in the annex hostel - Suresh, Anil, Ajith, Ameer, Rajesh, and Retnakumar, for adding colour to the CDS life. I also thank them for their concern and care.

The library, computer and administrative staff have been extremely helpful and nice towards me. CDS library staffs have been wonderful with their ever-willing helping hand, especially, the matchless Anil Kumar, Gopakumar, Molly Aunty, Ameer, Shobha Chechi and others. At the administration, Mr. Soman Nair always encouraged me to aim beyond the becker walls of CDS. Phil Roy, Ramesh, Suresh Chandran, Sree Kumari, Geetha, Celin, Chandrika, Sujanabai, Radhamany, Padma, and Chandra were really helpful and kept enquiring about the work. Krishnan Kutty, Bahdur, Gopidas, Solomon, Lekha, and the 'chechis' at SEWA deserve their share of gratitude for being very helpful and nice to me.

In the campus, I was really fortunate have many homes away from home. The lovable kids of the campus made their families accessible to me. Ashwin took care of my welfare in the campus more than any one else. He was the one who made sure that his Deepa aunty ate in time, slept well, and had seen good movies for a break. Maya, Devoo, Tapan, Teju, and Anju were always there to provide the best of friendship and company, and along with the other children in the campus - Unni, Thithash, Karthika, Gokul, Sharanaya, Anu and others - really rekindled my "creative" interests. I thank the families of Dr. Narayana, Mr. Soman Nair, Mrs. Padma Subramanian, Achin and Indrani, Binoy-Jayasree with the ever pleasant Kannan, Sunita-Sebastian and their vava, and Sanjith- Anju for giving me the family atmosphere at CDS.

The 140 doctors and their assistance and the thousands of people of the 350 families whom I had interacted for my field survey and the people in their neighbourhood deserve my heartfelt gratitude. If it was not for their willingness to part with their opinions and co-operation, it would have been difficult to do the study. I also thank the authorities at the Ambalappuzha Panchayat, especially Smt. Maheswari amma for their assistance in collecting the much needed secondary data. I also thank Yamuna, Usha, Subair and Nabeesa for their assistance during my fieldwork.

My interest in the economics of health care has its roots in my family's involvement with health care. I thank my grandfather and my mother for the inspiration. My mother and brother took a keen interest in my 'interest' and provided all the necessary help to carry on with it without putting any family pressures. Amma took pain to accompany me most of the days to the field and her medical knowledge was really helpful while understanding the concepts of morbidity and health care. It was her dream to fulfill my late father's dream of seeing me doing well in academics and for the silent support she extended to for my efforts; I have finally this thesis which I am dedicating to her. Finally, I thank God almighty for giving me enough strength to pursue what I wanted and sailing me through.

Deepa Sankar.
